

10 not remember to-day's mistakes, except as they help you to commit fewer tomorrow.

Four Thousand Bushels of Corn

(Continued from last week.)

THE university, with its magnificant of teaching boys how to farm, was a revelation to Jimmie. The one day he could give to insured in the culture recognition. to inspecting the college grounds and buildings passed all too quickly. The yards and barns full of high-class stock, and the feeding tables and stock, and the feeding tables and charts, opened up for Jimmie a new vista of possibilities in farming. The soil experiments interested him especially; for there the fields of cora especially; for there the nelds of cora and oats, cultivated by the system that his neighbors at home used, were shown in contrast to the plots where shown in contrast to the plots where clover was grown in rotation, and in still greater contrast to those that moreover had been treated with rock phosphate or bone meal.

And the enthusiastic farmers told in simple language their plans and mistakes and their failures and successes interested Jimmie greatly. Best of all was the enthusiasm of best of all was the entudatash of those farmers who had learned to make the soil give abundantly of its treasures. One of those men had re-cords showing that the profits from his quarter-section farm would pay inter-est on land worth $450 an acre. Anest on land worth $450 an acre. Another declared that for the past eleven years a certain seven-acre field on his farm had pald six per cent, interest on a valuation of $1,000 an acre.

The farmers grew eloquent in their discussions of alfalfa and silage—two things that were almost unknown in Jimmie's neighborhood. They said Jimmie's neighborhood. They said that they had got big profits from hogs in alfalfa, by "hogging down corn," and by using clover in the rotation.

and by using clover in the rotation.

"There is a whole lot more to farming than I ever dreamed of," Jimmle said to Colonel Edwards, when they were on their way home. "Why don't were on their way home. "Why don't more farmers take advantage of these things that the agricultural college and farmers' institute are telling them?

"They do, lots of them. But it's a slow process. Most farmers want to see a thing, as well as hear about it, see a thing, as well as hear about it, before they put their bard-earned money into it. That is why the work that Professor Eckhardt is doing over n DeKalb County ought to accomplish so much. He shows the farmers in the state of the state right on their own farms what can be done with improved methods."

Jimmie had intended to go home by way of Chicago, and to spend an even-ing with water; but at the last moment he decided that he had better go home at once and look after his men. "There's no knowing but that Jake

may have gone on a strike," he said to the preacher. "He never could may have gother.

"He never could stand being made fun of, and if the boys have found out that he is ploughing corn in the last half of July, they will plague the life out of him."

Jimmie's fears were not realized. however, for when he reached home, he found that the men had just finished going over the two prize forties. "Only what? You don't seem to be very much pleased, Sis. Don't you realize what a splendid chance it is for me?"

"Yes, it is a splendid chance. It's mean of me not to rejoice with you, but the thinking the property of the thinking the thinking the thinking of the thinking the thinking the thinking the same, the aways planned on making a farmer of his youngest boy."

Jimmie's face fell. "I hadn't thought of that," he admitted. "But father will see how it is. He won't want to keep me at home against my best inter-

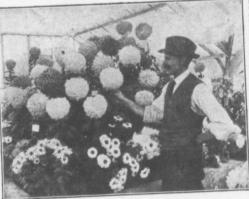

"Are you sure it is to your best interest to go to the city—have you con-sidered everything?" Mary asked,

"A hundred dollars a month? And a chance of working ahead? If that isn't to my best interest I don't know what is!"

By this time they had turned in at the gate of the farm. Mary went into the house without saying anything

When Jimmie came in to supp Aunt Jane shook her head dubiously.
"You'll get held sure when you get to Chicago, and then where will your $100 be?" she said.

The hired men laughed heartily at

"Mum" Blooms Delightful to the Eye of All Flower Lovers.

This is the season for chrysanthemums and such beautiful blooms as are here shown, may be seen at the Central Experimental Farm Greenhouses, at Ottawa. Blooms such as these are grown in sinch pots and command the admiration of all who have the privilege of visiting the greenhouses.

hired men at the same task the day

hoes to clean out the few remaining weeds. Jake started to carry out this order so cheerfully that Jimmie thought something must be wrong.

Bill explained Jake's alacrity while they were milking that night; Mr.

Hodgekins, it seemed, had set his

About ten o'clock the next morning, Mary came out to the barn, where Jimnie was working, and handed him a

The letter was addressed in Walter's familiar handwriting. Jimmie ter's familiar handwriting. "I have found just the opening for you," Walter wrote; "a better one than that paint company's job last spring. Come in to see me right away. It is the best crone; a setter one that that paint see me right away. It is the best chance you are lifely to get."

When Jimmie came back. The concentration of the concen this. Since they had learned of Jimmie's new position in the city they regarded him with greater respect. A hundred dollars a month seemed a fortune to them

The next morning Sam Walker came The next morning sain walker came over to congratulate Jimmie. "It will be mighty lonesome flere without you, but, of course, you couldn't think of refusing such a splendid offer," he

"I don't know how we shall ever get along without you," the preacher said, that afternoon. "You don't know how it's disappointed the colonel, though. He hoped you would stay though. He hoped you wo: I' stay here and become a scientific farmer. "I believe I could," Jimmie answered. "But there isn't enough money in it, and there isn't the chance to do big things that there is in the city. At least, that's what Walter says, and I guess he's about right."

I guess he's about right."
The dry weather at tasseling time injured some of the corn in the neighborhood; the white burned tassels showed thick in certain of the fields. The best five fields in the context were little affected, however. As far were little affected, however. As far as could be told by their appearance they were still even in the race. All were earing out well. There would naturally be more or less difference in the filling of the ears, and upon that would depend the result of the contest. That was the point Jimmie was straid of the home.

would depend the result of the contest. That was the point Jimmie was friend Mr. Hodgekins' remark that he peat-land corn would not fill well.
As the weeks went on, however,
Jimmie saw that the corn on the peat
ofty was growing big, sound ears—
at least, they compared favorably with those on the preacher's forty. He did not know how they would compare with those on Hodgekins' and Ed.
Cassidy's and Verne Wilson's fields,
for the excitement had reaches much as a mar's informan's cornfield.
For years that been the custom of Dukedon farmers to hold a big piclitter was a sound the custom of Dukedon farmers to hold a big piclitter was a samether.

of Duketon farmers to hold a big ple-nic and pupilsing match during the latter part of September. This year the piter was to be at the Wilson Jimmie did not enter the cloudying match himself, but he en-couraged Bill Ellis to chroll in the men's ametur class, which was open to all men who had never won a prize in a ploughing match. Bill had featily to all men who had never won a prize in a ploughing match. Bill had finally consented to enter.

The day before the content, Jimmie went out and look chad been ploughing. The hired not two weeks before the a good deal of practice, both for been content, and so had been able to a good deal of practice, both for linself and for his team.

"That's splendid work, Bill." he said. "I don't know of another amateur round here who can beat it." "I'm going to do any beat," Bill answered. "It would mean more to me than you realize to vin that cup

me than you realize to vin that cup

tomorrow."

The day of the contest was perfect. The slight haze on the horizon mellowed the sunshine, and the faint breeze was laden with the harvest odors of a country autumn; all nature seemed to rest in peaceful laziness.

The contestants were on the ground by nine o'clock, and as soon as places were allotted to them, started to work. were allotted to them, started to work. Soon afterward, the crowd began to service—in wagons, buggies, and automobiles. It was a jolly, good-natured country crowd. Every one seemed to know evry one else. From all over the countryside people came to the ploufibling match.

"did" know I had so many riends," Jimmie said to Mary at noon, when he brought the big dinner basket from the buggy to the foot of the tree where their dinner was to be spread. where their dinner was to be spread.

The Walker family were there, too,
and several of the other neighbors.
Just as they were spreading the tablecloths, Colonel Edwards and his wife cloths, Colonel Edwards and his wife came along, and promptly accepted an invitation to join the party. Then followed one of those rare good times that can be had only round the heaping the properties of the control pic-nic. By the time the dinner was din-

nic. By the time the dinner was dilished, they were all laughing together menial comradeship.

After the dinner there was an exhibition of the big traction ploughs that turn a dozen furrows at once, atthough they do not do it half so well as the expert ploughmen. Then while half are ware measuring furrows. the judges were measuring furrows and comparing ridges, the crowd went over to the front pasture for a ball game. By the time that was over, word was passed along that the judges word was passed along that the judges had their decisions ready; as many as could crowded round the secretary's tent to hear the awards. Jimmie was in the front row, and he slapped Bill Ellis encouragingly on the back, and told him he would surely win. Jimmie was right; when the scarry, who was reading the award of prizes, finelly came to the men's anteur class, he announced that Bill Ellis (Concluded on page 17.)

Pres ties live ther and joy men ined and the the It is doct deck

as t

thro

shon ning

HI

on.

on le anch hear calm voun these popu far. peopl ing a and culos know

sioner Men

of a with In ter, d

archi

mothe to nut the or up wi carpet work not g about

to do

oursel if we the los so mai jov or solve t done ! could We st reading does fo f settle e for an can de course touch the ne ceive i

hold li departs