

The Coming of Spring. BY ANNIE E. HOWE.

The bads on the lilacs are swelling With the joy that lies deep in their breast And the blithe little robins are telling Their rapture from east unto west-

As the beautiful spring times comes tripping-Over the hills from afar, Her locks with the tender rain dripping, Her countenance bright as a star.

The north winds go sighing and sobbing To their bleak, icy caves by the seas ; While our pulses with pleasure are throbbing At the soft cooling touch of the breeze.

I am a ruined man."

Berwick ?"

and this note."

Escaped from its chains cold and icy, The brooklet goes singing once more ; While odors, so sweet and so spicy, Float up from the South's suppy shore.

The east skies are glowing in splendor, The west skies are gleaming with gold ; While murmurous voices, and tender, Steal up from each woodland and wold.

The grass and the flowers, long sleeping, Are springing in beauty again ; While light, fleecy cloudlets are weeping Soft, musical showers of rain.

No vestige of gloom or of sadness, Lies darkly on nature's fair face ; But joy, and hope only, and gladness, With many a magical grace.

Sweet season of life and of beauty ! Sweet season of hope and of love ! With hearts loud-exulting in duty We thank the good Father above

For the sunshine, the grass, and the flowers, The bird on its light soaring wing ; The music, the fragrance, the showers That come with thy presence, sweet Spring. -Ch. Advocate.
