

5. What do you mean by the term stunned? did he fall?—He was knocked back, because the handle of the whip came over his forehead. It was a hard blow. He fell back stunned slightly. He recoiled from the blow—recoiled is the proper term.

6. Did Mr Duncan not rush at me?—I have already stated that in the first part of my statement. After the blow he rushed at you, not before.

7. Did my conduct evince any intention of assaulting you?—No, it did not; because I taunted you afterwards, saying, "you had better apply that whip to me."

8. Did I distinctly answer "yes" to the question "do you mean my vote?"—I cannot state positively whether he made use of the word "yes." He said "you acted like a blackguard, or a set of blackguards." I don't think he used the word "yes." He may or may not have used the word "yes."

The prisoner says he is perfectly satisfied with Mr Davies's evidence.

He was then withdrawn in custody.

Then the House adjourned for one hour.

And being met—

On motion of the Hon. J. Longworth,

Ordered, That Dr John T. Jenkins be produced at the Bar in custody.

Which being done—

Mr Duncan, in his place, made the following statement:—

Coming in yesterday, about 3 o'clock, with Mr Davies, and behind him, I saw Dr Jenkins standing on the step at the outside door. Mr Davies was in front of me. When he [Mr D.] went up, Dr Jenkins said, "you ought to be proud of yourself," or some such words. I cannot tell exactly. Mr Davies said, "What do you mean, Dr Jenkins? is it for my vote yesterday?" Dr Jenkins said "yes." "I voted on principle," said Mr Davies. I don't know which said it first, and he (Mr Davies) said "I don't want to bandy words with you. Come on, Duncan; never mind him." I am not sure whether Mr Davies said that first, before Dr Jenkins said "you are a pair of blackguards," or "a d—d pair of blackguards." I said to him, "Dr Jenkins, do you mean that for me?" He said, "yes." I asked him if it was for voting against his father yesterday. He said "Yes; you are a d—d pack of blackguards, the whole of you." In reply, I said, "if you say so, you are a blackguard for saying so," and I walked in. He followed me inside, and said "Say that again, if you dare." I repeated two or three times, "you are a blackguard;" but I am not sure that I qualified it by saying every time "if you say so,"—I rather think I did not. And he was standing with his back towards the wall on the right hand side of the door as you come in. He had a whip in his hand. I did not observe it until it came down on my head, and before I had time to put up my hand the blow was struck;—it stunned me a good deal, and I rather staggered back. I was stupified for a little time. When I recovered—I had a walking-stick in my hand, and my first impulse was to make a drive at him with it; but recollecting it had a pike in the end, I thought if I stabbed him, it might do him a fatal injury; and I was changing the position of the stick, when I was taken hold of by two or three persons, and Mr Davies came also between me and him. I recognized Mr William Longworth, but none of the others who had hold of me; and they were hauling him back, and I saw Dr Jenkins standing, and felt him put his feet behind my feet as they were hauling me back. I do not know whether he struck me or not; but I feel my shoulder sore to-day, and I think he must have struck me, otherwise I do not know what caused the pain; and when I lost my balance they let me go, and I had no way of recovering myself, and I fell on my right elbow. When I got up, I did not recognize any person but the Hon. Mr Dingwell, and William Longworth, and Mr Davies. Several were standing there, and he was standing behind them, and those present insisted on my keeping the peace. I do not know anything particular that occurred, and we came up stairs. Some words were made use of. When he said "all of you," I understood him to say, all who voted against his father; that was the only construction I put on his words. The pike is about an inch and a-half long in my stick. [The stick was here produced, and shown to the prisoner at the Bar at his request.]

The following questions were then put to the Witness, through the chair:—

By the prisoner—
