question would have arisen in the partment. matter had the Corporation Tax Act not been passed. It was claimed on behalf of the appellants that the tax imposed by the Corporation Tax act and that which the city sought to already arranged for: levy were similar, and if that contention were established the floor space tax would not be imposed. The act did not give any name to the provincial tax, and the contention of the appellants was that, on the fair construction of the measure it mus be regarded as imposing a business tax. Under the act not every cor poration that did business in the province was taxed, but the government had seen fit to select banks. insurance, loan, railway, express and telegraph companies to pay an annual amount. The whole purpose sis of both the taxes it was sought to levy was that business was being carried on. If no business were transacted there could be no taxa-tion. There was no doubt that under the city charter the tax imposed by the city was in respect of business. The only matter in question was whether the other tax was a business tax, and whether both could be construed as similar within the meaning of the act. The intention of the measure was to make certain institutions pay because they did business. In the case of banks it fect of this, in the case of a trust fences against the by-laws. The ac- J. F. L.
