

TORTURED BY RHEUMATISM

Sunday School Supt. Tells How "Fruit-a-lives" Relieved

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 1st, 1913.
 "I have lived in this city for more than 12 years and am well known. I suffered from Rheumatism, especially in my hands. I spent a lot of money without any good results. I have taken 'Fruit-a-lives' for 18 months now and am pleased to tell you that I am well. All the enlargement has left my hands, and perhaps never will, but the soreness is all gone and I can do any kind of work. I have gained 35 pounds in eighteen months."

R. A. WAUGH.
 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers or direct from Fruit-a-lives Limited, Ottawa.

The Spider-Web.

Whenever I see
 On bush or tree
 A great big spider-web,
 I say with a shout,
 "Little fly, look out!
 That web seems pretty and white,
 But a spider hides there, and is ready to bite."

So if you see here:
 Drinks cider or beer,
 I say to him now,
 With my very best bow,
 "Have a care of that lager or cider,
 For there hides a wicked old spider,
 And it fills him with joy
 To catch man or boy
 And weave all about him with terrible might
 The meshes of habit—the rum apple."

A Result of Drink.

Last night Ralph Maxson Greene died of alcoholism in a cheap hotel on State street. Unless relatives are heard from, his body will be buried in the potter's field. A few hours before his death, Greene called for a pencil and some paper.

This is what he wrote:
 "Six months ago I was earning $300 a month as a civil and general engineer. I had a wife and a little daughter and a nice home in Winipeg, Canada. I did not drink. Then I was employed by the United States government on the marine barracks at Washington, D. C. Since that night I have taken many drinks.
 "I lost my speed. Then I lost my job. Then I continued to drink, and soon I discovered that I couldn't get another job. I felt that I did not want another job as long as I could get something to drink. I lost my home. Then I came to Chicago.
 "I am going to die. I don't care. I want to say this before I go: Let booze alone. It can't be whipped. It's too fast for me and it's too fast for you. For booze I gave everything I had, and now that I haven't anything left, booze will take me."

The body of Greene was taken to the county morgue. It was learned from the authorities in Winipeg that Greene formerly had been one of the best known engineers in Canada. He was one of the engineers of the Broad street depot in Philadelphia and had been superintendent of the Dominion Bridge Company and later the Manitoba Bridge and Iron Works.
 Efforts to locate relatives or his wife last night failed.

Temperance Movements In Japan.

In "The Missionary Review" for September we find the following:
 A growing temperance sentiment in Japan is reported by the Rev. F. O. Mills, who is engaged in evangelistic work among railway men. Last summer, for example, a temperance society was organized in Fukuoka, with over 100 members, and this year on New Year's Day, which is usually a time of drunkenness, the station master was brave enough to leave safe out of the fare. His many callers

WAS TRUE TO HIM

Convict's Mountain Sweetheart Clung to Him Through All His Troubles.

By GEORGE A. BAFFIN.
 He crouched in the underground, cautiously parting the bushes with one hand to peer out into the mountain side. He was a ragged giant of a man, circumscribed, yet with strange pallor upon his face. Upon each wrist, too, were half-healed scars. These had been caused by the heroic efforts which he had used to free himself from his manacles. But he was free at last. He had escaped from the state penitentiary three weeks before and his pursuers had never been able to discover his secret hiding place upon Bear mountain.

He had heard them seeking for him eternally, on the very day after his escape he had come upon one of the guards dozing under a fir tree. He had taken his rifle and then, awakening him, scornfully ordered him to depart. The man had obeyed fearfully and the rifle and a box of matches had enabled the fugitive to live. But every time he brought down a rabbit or partridge the sound of the shot, echoing through the valleys, at once informed his pursuers of his whereabouts.

He looked round cautiously. No one was in sight. High up on the opposite hill he saw the outlines of a tiny cabin. It was his sweetheart's home—Mollie Stark's. It was to avenge an insult to her that he had shot and crippled Seth Baldwin. That was two years before, and he had sworn to be true to him.

But since his flight he had not dared go near her home. It was too desperate a chance to take. But a visit on his part to the wild glen in which they had plighted their troth had resulted in the finding of a package of food placed there by Mollie. In it was a little note.

"Dear Ben," it ran. "I hid this and brought it here thinking you would come here. Come to the cabin on Monday night at nine. Lovingly, Mollie."
 The full moon gave almost as much light as the sun. The fugitive crawled down the slope and approached the opposite height, worming his way up through the ferns and closed-clinging vines. At last he emerged upon a little rocky eminence a hundred yards distant from the cabin. From Mollie's window a rag fluttered. The fugitive understood that sign. She was alone. Grasping his rifle he went forward boldly.

He Was Free at Last.

He was within ten yards when the door opened. His heart leaped. Mollie stood in the doorway, her arms outstretched, to welcome him. Behind her was the flickering candle. But as he drew near, suddenly a sight froze his blood. The shadow of a man had passed the candle, another, and another. He halted in his tracks. Behind Mollie he saw a rifle barrel.

With an oath he flung back into the brushwood. He would have fired, but, treacherous though she was, he could not bring himself to kill her. He heard yells behind him, Mollie's screams, the shouts of his pursuers. An hour later he dropped exhausted upon the ground, inside his cave. It was a bear's hole, cunningly hidden on the mountain side. Among that waste of burned-over pine stumps none could hit upon it save by accident, and he did not anticipate that it was not fear that made him pant like a marathon runner, but wrath and self-contempt.

Mollie was a waitress! She had been lured by a cheat of a girl, for whose sake he had suffered two years in the penitentiary. Anger overcame all other feelings. He would show her! He would show them! What should he do?

For an hour he lay thinking, gnawing his lip in rage. His passion for her had been so strong, his love so large a part of his existence, that the revelation was terrible. He must contrive some punishment commensurate with the crime. Among the hill women there could be none other so base as to betray her lover, as Mollie had sought to betray him. He had recognized one of the men in the parlor as Frank Merriman, the sheriff. He had been a suitor for Mollie's hand before she promised herself to Ben. Doubtless he had persuaded her.
 Ha! He had his plan. It flashed into his brain ready-forged in the furnace of his wrath. Doubtless Merriman would be at her home the following night. Her father, the bedridden old man, would be helpless. He would steal in and shoot the man before Mollie's eyes—and then—then—then—her hair, leaving her to the derision of the hill folk.

 His plan consumed him. He passed the outstanding hours like a man in a delirium. Day dawned, the sun blazed upon the wild-eyed man who paced to and fro upon the mountain side. The shadows lengthened as the sun declined; at last the dery orb touched the horizon. Shouldering his rifle he marched doggedly through the scrub until once more he saw Mollie's cabin outlined against the darkening sky upon the further ridge. Even as he watched a tiny spark flashed out from the parlor candle.
 An hour later he was lying upon his stomach outside the cabin. Inside he saw Frank Merriman, smoking in one corner. Mollie was laying the supper table. Occasionally she stopped before the sheriff and seemed to plead with him. Ben gritted his teeth.
 If only Merriman would lay aside his rifle. "But he kept his clasp of it even at the supper table; it was only later when he arose that he placed it for a moment against the mud wall. The watcher knew that his time had come. Mollie's hands were on Merriman's arm and she was pleading very earnestly. Ben fancied that she was crying.
 He sprang to his feet and rushed through the open door. He saw in distinctly, the world was revolving in a very mist. "Bring down my rifle!" he cried, not enraged to fire. Ben had dropped his rifle and his hands were on the sheriff's throat.
 To and fro they wrestled. The table chairs were spinning across the room. The candle was dashed to the floor, and in the bewildering night each only knew that he was fighting for an impulse with the other. Merriman dug his knuckles into the hollow space between the point of the jaw and the great cord behind the ear—an old woodman's trick, to compress the carotid and produce unconsciousness. He felt his enemy weakening. He had him at his mercy now. Suddenly a tremendous blow fell upon his head from behind. He heard the shivering of the cheap rifle stock, flung out of his hands, fell for some stable hold in the encompassing darkness, and tumbled to the ground. The last thing that he saw as his senses left him was the faint glimmer of the red candle and Mollie's agonized face, in its aureole hair.
 "Ben!"
 He started out through the whitening phantasmagoria that surrounded him. He was dizzy and deathly sick. Gradually, as the fog cleared from his brain, he realized that he was lying in a little room. He lay in Mollie's room upon a bed, and the face that he loved best in all the world was bending over him.
 "Thank God he is coming to, Frank!"
 "You had better leave him for the present. It was the voice of Merriman. He came into the circle of Ben's vision, a mighty man, his face swathed in bandages. Looking upon him, Ben dimly wondered how he had ever had the strength to wrestle with such a fellow. He was too weak to lift a finger now.
 "Well, young fellow!" Merriman was scowling down at him. "You've done for yourself pretty well now," he continued. "If my nephew, Walt, hadn't had the gumption to come up at the right moment and snatch my rifle you'd have had a murder charge against you. I thought you were gone when I saw the whack he gave you that night."
 "That night! When?"
 "Two weeks ago tomorrow. Yep, I reckon you're kind of lost count of time," he continued, smiling less evilly. "You've been mighty near death, young fellow, let me tell you."
 "Well, I guess you've won," said Ben feebly. "Whom are you talking to take me back to the penitentiary?"
 Frank Merriman scratched his head, then, fingering his bandages, he smiled, as if at length a smile broke out upon his face.
 "When will you be ready to start?" he asked.
 "You'll have to put me in a cart, I reckon," answered Ben. "Frank," he continued, "I'm likely to get a life sentence now and we aren't likely to meet again. I want to ask a promise of you. Treat Mollie well. She's the finest girl in the world, and she was false to me—well, I reckon it was for your sake, Frank."
 The sheriff stared at him. Then he turned abruptly away. "The—devil—you—say!" he muttered, and disappeared.
 He went to the door and called the girl. Ben heard them whispering outside. And presently he was aware, in his weakness, that Mollie was bending over him again.
 "Ben!"
 "Mollie!"
 "Ben, dearest. Did you think I had betrayed you, Ben? Did you dare to think that I was untrue to you?"
 He felt her tears drop on his hand. He listened dumbly, in an agony of anticipation and doubts he dared not utter.
 "Listen, Ben! You are free. Free to go where you will. When you escaped the newspapers took up your case. They demanded that you should be set free. The governor was appealed to. He said that you had been punished enough. Your pardon arrived the week before you first came to the cabin. That was why I went to the mountain. I should have told you, but I wanted it to come as a surprise. That night Mr. Merriman was waiting here to hand it to you. You are free, Ben, free to go where you will—free to—to marry me—if you want to!"
