On Tuesday word was received that they had been seen near Wood Point and Warden Forster and a guard arrested them. It is supposed they were making for the shore intending to steal a boat to take them across the bay where they could take passage on some American steamer. Sears is a well known character about town. ROWDYISM.—A correspondent sends the following:—Why is it that the evening prayer meetings in some of our churches are so often interrupted by a gang of hoodlums running around outside, pecking into the windows, and in other ways making it unpleasant for the worshippers within? It is because they do not know that the law if appealed to would deal hard with them, or is it because ghouls, like demons and gamins are attracted by the light? A person suggests that it is a literal application of Rev. 22: 16 "For without the nuisance has been tolerated so long."

To cross the Atlantic.

IN A TWELVE FOOT BOAT.
Capt. Josiah W. Lawlor, the celebrated lone voyager, of Chelsea, Mass., and his 12 foot canvas boat in which he intends to cross the Atlantic to Queenstown, Ireland, spent Sunday at the Intercolonial Hotel. The little craft was on exhibition in the hall and her versatile commander had no objection to telling what he had done in the way of perilous sailing and what he had still on the programme for execution in the line. "The Crawford Shoe" is the name given to the boat and she is a very homely, black craft, twelve feet long, made of canvas stretched upon a wooden frame, and capable of being folded up to one half her sailing dimensions for convenience of storage. The boat is built by the Acme Folding Canvas Boat Co. of Miami, Fla. She is covered entirely with canvas except a small space in the centre where the navigator sits, and is protected by a long neck of canvas, which when it is wrapped about his body prevents the sea, which will break over the boat, from getting inside. She is fitted with oars, manual and jib. Capt. Lawlor carries with him an extensive supply of condensed foods, of every description, and several very compact devices for navigating his boat. He also carries a camera, using celluloid films, and he expects to be able to get some views of sharks, whales and other marine creatures. He is also armed with weapons to protect himself from "inquisitive sharks."

Capt. Lawlor left Boston on June 5, sailed up to St. John where he had a better suite of sails made than those he started with. When leaving Boston he was told that by sailing up the Tantramar he could work his boat through the lakes to the Straits, but later learned differently. He sailed up the Bay from St. John on Saturday and on Monday boarded the Cape Tormentine and took the water for Newfoundland and where he will ship his stores and sail to Ireland. He will take as his course the route taken by the ship "The Crawford Shoe" to Paris from New York, and later the "Sea-Scout," a 14 foot boat from Boston to England in 42 days. To the landman this sort of thing has a long list of horrors, but Lawlor appears to feel confident that he will accomplish his feat safely and in good time. At periods during the voyage bottles containing notes will be sent adrift and the finders are asked to forward them to the Crawford Shoe. Should the trip prove successful Lawlor and the "Crawford Shoe" will form one of the attractions at the World's Fair next year.
