The Hague, Nov. 13.-Friends of Queen Wilhelmina say she has taken to heart of late the grave question raised by the absence of an heir to the throne, and has their own hands, burst through the absence of an neir to the throne, and has often been heard to exclaim in pitiful accents: "If I die, what will happen to the country?" She is inclined to buttress the proposal already made by politicians to modify the constitution in order that Congress may have power to override the normal law of succession in the event of their height produced by Gatti and Catches the proposal of the season of the produced by Gatti and Catches the proposal succession in the event of the season of the produced by Gatti and Catches the proposal succession in the event of the season of the produced by Gatti and Catches the proposal succession in the event of the season of the produced by Gatti and the proposal already made by politicians to making the proposal already making the proposal alr their being no direct heir to the throne. The heir presumptive, the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, would have to resign his own duchy to accept the throne of Holland, and this he would refuse to do, being a quiet man, shrinking from state and trouble. He failing, the heir is Princess Marie of Saxe-Weimar, wife of Prince Henry VII. of Reuss, who is highly unpopular, and who is thought to of practically selling Holland to the Kaiser. It is remarked that the fingo German National Zeitung recently inaugurated a campaign in favor of the Germanization of Holland, one of the steps being for the of Holland, one of the steps being for the Prince of Reuss to open a residence there and angle for popularity.

The Queen is believed to prefer the unpleasant idea of Holland becoming a republic rather than that a German prince should reign over her powerless dominions. Care is said to be wearing her down more than is reasonable when she is so young and the trouble appears so remote.
