Grown-Ups Sometimes Hurt Sensitive Children by Their So-Called Fun.

By JULIA HOYT.

Number eight of the commandments concerns something of which I spoke in a former article of mine in regard to children. It is: "Thou shalt always answer a child's quesshall always this wer a child's ques-tions." I must confess to a little sympathy for parents, relatives and friends of children who take that commandment literally. Although I believe strongly that we should answer every question put to us by a child when an answer is within the range of possibility, I know from personal experience that they ask many questions which I, at least, have found myself quite incapable of answering.

The theory is the right one, however, and not at all followed by many older people. They often coolly dis-miss any question that may be a little bit difficult for them to answer merely by saying, "Oh, you wouldn't the orchestra accompaniment on a understand," or "You are too little to know."
