Behalf. An appeal to the Children's Hospital committee for adequate equipment in the gymnasium for corrective exercises was made before the executive of that body yesterday afternoon, by Miss Grace Fairley, lady superintendent of Victoria hospital, of which the War Memorial Children's Hospital is a part. The meeting, which was the first since last spring, was held at the home of

Miss Fairley pointed to the fact that the detention ward had been changed from the basement of the hospital to the bright sunny upper floor, which was a great improvement. She was delighted with the way in which the hospital clinics moron the fake investments that men try to get intelligent women to go into.

The women who inherit money are the predestined prey not only of these sharpers, but of men way in which the hospital clinics were being attended.

The business of the afternoon included the appointing of delegates to attend the Hospital Aids convention to be held in Galt on October 8 and to be held in Galt on October 8 and 9, as follows: Mrs. A. H. Smith, Mrs. Cl. T. Campbell, Mrs. H. J. Sutherland, and Mrs. Ross Thomas. It was decided to continue sending the shildren at the hospital their regular Sunday treat of ice-cream, which was initiated last summer.

The committee desires to keep before the public the fact that the before the public the fact that the Children's Hospital is a war talks so much about his soul, borcommittee the public the fact that the before the public the fact th memorial, and that the idea behind it is to save a life for every life sacrificed in the late war.

the leading roles in Marcheta, attractive musical comedy, which is being presented under the auspices of the I. O. D. E. at the Grand Theatre on Man Seldom Gives Woman a Square Deal in Money Matters, Yet He Lavishes Gold on Woman.

One of the strangest things in the world is the way men deal with wo-

Furthermore, what makes men's attitude on the subject particularly curious and inexplicable is the fact that men spend their lives working to make money for women, and almost all of the money they earn goes to women in one way or another.

Yet, for all of this, men will steal a woman's money with less compunction than they will a man's, and they will oftener over-reach her in a trade than they will a man. Even the man pho loves a woman will be erous to her about money, but seldom just. Somehow there seems to be a vague idea in the masculine mind that a woman should not have any money, and that it is a man's duty to take it away from her.

A vivid illustration of this is street.

found in the way men blocked every avenue of money-making to women for so many years. Every door of opportunity was shut in their faces, and no matter what talents, what energy, what skill a woman had; no matter how bitter the bread of dependence was in her mouth, there was no way by which she could earn money. She had to remain an unpaid domestic slave in the home.

And even now, when women have achieved a large measure of financial independence, a woman has to do not only as good work as a man, but better work and more of it to get an equal salary. Also her employer always feels that he is being held up when a woman demands of him the wages for her services that he would never think of begrudging a man.

Every woman who is a success in business or a profession will tell you that she has to fight harder to keep her money than she did to make it, because she is beset by hordes of swindlers who are determined to get it away from her and who try to induce her to go into schemes that are Miss Fairley pointed out that much might be done for the children in the might be done for the children in the way of corrective exercises, should the gymnasium be equipped for that purpose. There was a nurse already employed for massage, and she might very well help with the gymnasium work.

> deal about money in the domes-tic relationship. If an honest man is going into business partnership with another man he spreads all of his cards upon the table. He tells the other man just exactly what he is making. He shows him just what his liabilities and assets are, and he does not try to deceive him about how the prospects for the future stand. Now, when a woman marries a man she goes into a life partnership with him, and she puts into it all that she has, but she generally has to go into it blind because it is only the exceptional man who ever talks business to the girl he is courting.

And then, having ground down the face of the working woman and robbed the widow and sold bogus oil stock to the ill-paid teacher, man turns around and lavishes jewels, and silks, and satins and laces, and imousines on woman, and pours into her lap the gold of the world.
