As an excuse to have a closer look at the lovely though inanimate bride, he holdly entered the store and asked Miss Phenix if it was for sale. The lady replied in the negative adding with a pleasant French accent that she had merely made the costame to show what she could do in the dressmaking line. The material in the little dress is of brocaded and plain cream colored satin, and it is made up with that artistic and skilful hand so peculiar to the French. All the little girls in the west end covet with longing eyes the beautifully dressed doll, and no wonder for it is attracting the attention of the town. What Miss Phenix can make for a doll she can make in equal and even superior style for figures in the firsh, and she is gradually drawing about her a large portion of the fashionable trade of the city.

INHUMANITY OF BRITISH TROOFS DENIED.

Major General Havelock Allan has published a letter denying that the English as soldiers slaughtered wounded Egyptians.

Dr. James Wilmot Hunter, jr., of the village of Stouffville, out on the Nipissing railway, sued for the hand of Miss Ida Dougherty, a young lady of 13, and daughter of Reeve Dougherty of the same village. The lady received the doctor's attentions with a degree of favor that gave the young sawbones the assurance that he was "the best man." The above facts carae out in evidence yesterday at the trial. Mr. E. Irving prosecuted and Mr. N. Murphy of this city and Mr. Blain of Urbridge defended.

Mr. Doughtery denied ever having gave I'da his permission to marry Hunter, but when the young lady took the stand she he said to her: "If you persist in going with Hunter you can go, and I never want to see your face again." She further testified that she told her lover of this and of other ill-treatment and they decided to get married in spite of all human agencies. Miss Doughtery was the only witness for the defence.

The defendant occupied a seat beside his counsel and when the young lady passed him on her way to the stand she samiled.
