THE SUN.

In the system called the clar the sun is the centre and principal body. According to the nebular hypothesis the whole matter of the solar sys-tem was diffused through space through the action of heat and then by condensation and the action of gravitation it formed on centres, and hence the formation of planeis and their satellites. We have evidence of this pro-cess every day in the form-ation of clouds. Clouds are diffused matter in space through the action of the heat of the sun. Condensation takes place, the vapor or water forms on centres in the shape of rain drops and then descend No. to the earth. The inevitable entries tate of the planets of the solar system is to return to the sun like rain drops, there again to be evolved through heat dissi-pation. The life and death of planets are reasonably infer-red from the lite and death of beings on the earth. We per-ceive that dea h is essential to life and that life is essential to death. These are the two arms of the balance by which change is adjusted in the direction of equilibrium. But for the sun there could be no such thing as lite on the earth. All animal and vegetable life are sustained and made poss ble du the by the sun's heat. The obliquity of the axis of the earth to the plane of the ecliptic in re-WORTGAGE SALE lation to the sun gives the rotation of the seasons. The magnificent variety thus generated under the action of the sun's light and heat inspires man with a love for the beautified in the city of Toronto, ful in art and nature. The pre-sentation of alternate sides of 180 degrees each of the earth by its diarnal motion in 24 hours to the sun gives day and night.
