> 33 octrp WE MUST DIE.

Though life we spend in sunny howers, Mid laugh og meads and scented flowers, And bliss attends our tranquit hours, Yet we must die.

Tho' Love's bright torch may gladly blaze; Though teem with joy our ha, py days;
Though beauty's suite designs our gaze.
Yet we must die.

Though oft by fancy borne away, We bask in regions bright and gay; Where pleasure grows with constant ray, Yet we must die.

Though circled with the pomp of siste, Our word the law, our winsper fate, Our halls must soon be describe. Yet we must size.

For we must part with love's bright ray,

Our gayest dreams must fit away, Wealth, beauty, pleasure air decay; And we must die.

PRAYER.

There is an eye that never sleeps Beneath the wing of night; There is an car that never shuts When darkness shrouds the light.

There is an aim that never tires
When human attempth gives away;
There is a love that never lails
When earthly loves decay.

Thateve is fix'd on straph throngs,-That car is hird with engel's songs,-That arm upholds the worlds on high, That love is thron'd beyond the sky

But there's power which man can wield, When mor'al aid is vain. That eye, that arm that have to reach, That listening car to gain.

That power is prayer—supendous boon!
To said beings giv'u. A
It moves the Mind omorposent.
That rules o'er earth and heav'n.

Important to Bachelors. - Withut a woman, what is man! A poor, solitar, misanthrepic creature : rough, uncooth, and hard unfeeling, and almost brutal being. Take from the heart the passion of love. and life is not worth having; youth has nothing to enjoy, and age nothing to remember with delight .-And without marriage, without seection, without single attachment, what is love? The mere passion is still the same, but leading to woes instead of pleasures; plunging, in short, a whole community into the miseries of debauchery and prostitution, depriving children of the care and protection due what a herd of beasts now is. - tarming to some purpose. from parents, and making a people Cobbett's Sermons.
