ON THE ALTAR OF FATE BY— MRS. EDWARD KENNARD

But what he wanted in experience he made up for in "pluck" and Dot could not help admiring the lion-hearted manner in which on one or two occasions he had led the whole field. Courage always appears to a woman. There are few things for which she entertains a greater liking and respect. Let her once convict a man of cowardice, and she never thinks the same of him again. He may be ever so nice, in a hundred different ways, but henceforth she invariably views him with a certain amount of contempt. Bob's nerve won him golden opinions from Dot, and once or twice her smile of approbation made his heart beat fast with rising hope.

And now, this bold, stout-hearted fox, finding that as long as he kept to the grass his enemies pressed upon him closer and closer, resolved to make one last bid for his brush. He therefore tried the effect of a little dodging. No doubt, he was pretty good. A few ingenious turns and twists might baffle his mortal foes even at the eleventh hour.

So he carefully wended his way through gardens and farmyards, past cottages and barns and out-houses. Yet the shelter he sought he could not find. None seemed entirely safe, not even that old, hollow tree, standing in an orchard, whose roots had formed many a little tortuous passage under the brown earth. Possibly, spiders and fox-terriers flashed across his mind's eye.

Nevertheless, he succeeded in embarrassing his pursuers, and in obtaining a few minutes' respite. Just five-and-forty minutes after he had left the osier-bed, hounds threw up their heads, and looked uncertainly about them, came to a sudden halt within one field of Smallborough village. Horsemen flung themselves from their panting steeds and stood critically examining scratched legs and spur-marked sides, holding the bridges in their hands so as to be able to remount at any moment. But the poor hounds seemed in no hurry to continue their exertions—quivering tails, heaving flanks, outstretched necks, told a sad tale of distress in the majority of cases.

Meantime, hounds were heathering about in several directions, with noses and sterno both busy. Burnett left them try to puzzle it out, but they failed to take up the line. Then, with a ringing cheer and a "haie forrard, forrard, my beauties!" he lifted them and made a scientific cast, whilst his followers, watching the proceedings without moving and wondering how the dickens it was, that in ten good runs out of a dozen, those infernal roadsters invariably contrived to turn up just when they were not wanted and did the greatest possible amount of mischief. Helter-skelter, gallop-gallop, here they come, clattering over the stoney macadam at topmost speed, and with a ruthless disregard for joints and sinews. Such a noise as they made, too. A regiment of soldiers would have appeared quiet as mice in comparison.

Of course they headed the fox. That was a foregone conclusion, for was there ever a roadster who did not? But to this fact the whole tribe are contemptuously indifferent. They don't go out to hunt but to gallop. Not on the grass, mind you. No, they are afraid. They might come across mole-hills or rabbit-holes or even have to jump, an idea which makes the blood in their veins run cold. Only on the road do they feel safe from all such horrid possibilities, therefore to the road do they cleave, like limpets to a rock. But we will give the mighty army of roadsters their due, and to do them justice, they can talk. Not one of the number who has not some marvelous experience to record and who is not supremely satisfied with his individual performances. Perhaps it is only natural that the men who have jumped every fence and come with their limbs, if not their necks, and made acquaintance with mother earth in her hardest and most disagreeable form—namely, when she rises up and greets you between the eyes—should harbor a contemptuous hostility against the spiritless babblers who come swarming around the moment all danger is passed.

But by this time Burnett had succeeded in hitting off the line of the fox. Whilst trotting down a road the hounds suddenly stopped, and one by one, creeping under a stiff, hog-backed style, once more threw their tongues in deadly fashion, which made all the dismounted gentlemen leap to their horses' backs, tossing away their just-lit cigars and half-tasted sandwiches. Perhaps they would not have been in quite such a hurry had they known what a formidable obstacle awaited them.

Their ardor had cooled a little, and a few of the horses displayed much spirit. They would have preferred some extra minutes' repose, but it was not to be. In spite of the pace, Burnett had still a fair share of life left in him. Nevertheless, that same hog-backed style was by no means a pleasing prospect to tired-out animals still catching at their breath. Yet there was not any express, the fence on either side being quite seven feet high and as thick and solid as a stone wall. The thing had to be done, but nobody liked to attempt it first. Even Burnett passed, though the exhausted condition of his horse rendered the delay not merely wise, but imperative. If only hounds would check. But no; they stole ahead with renewed confidence, every now and again one or the other of them giving tongue, and all their bristles up, as if their fox were quite close in front of them.

Doctor Lankester was a brave man, and, in spite of his forty-odd years, had nerves of iron. His blood was up. Sugarloaf happened to be particularly good at timber, and she had in a measure regained her wind. His daughter and Mr. Jarrett were among the little anxious throng, who blocked the roadway. The roadsters had already galloped off.

Dot knew the meaning of that keen sparkle in her father's eye, accompanied by a sudden contraction of the brow. It signified business. "You are not going to jump it, are you, papa?" she inquired with some uneasiness.

TO BE CONTINUED SUED BY HIS DOCTOR.

"A doctor here has sued me for $12.50, which I claimed was excessive for a case of cholera morbus," says R. White, of Coachella, Cal. "At the trial he priced his medical skill and medicine. I asked him if it was not Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy he used as I had good reason to believe it was, and he would not say under oath that it was not." No doctor could use a better remedy than this in a case of cholera morbus, it never fails. Sold by all druggists.

SHIELDS AS MANAGER.

Progress of New Company at the "Soo" in Reorganizing Industries.

Sault Ste. Marie, June 4.—The officials of the new company now owning the Consolidated Company's assets, have made a statement to the effect that all the works will be put into operation as rapidly as possible. A special effort will be made to begin the rolling of rails at once, in order to provide large supplies required by the G.T.P. Superintendent Lewis expects to begin rolling rails before July 1, at the rate of 500 tons a day.

The directors of the Lake Superior Company and the subsidiary companies will be elected next week, and they will then decide on plans for the operation of the works. C. Shields has been offered the position of general manager. He will announce his decision at the first meeting of the directors.

Rumor Contradicted.
Details of re-organization of the Soo industries at this end are being rapidly perfected. Following the payment of claims of Speyer & Co. the new company is now holding mortgage and collateral securities, and have continued Receiver B. F. Fackenthal, Jr., in possession, which is a right absolute until completion of re-organization. F. H. Clergue is still devoting his time and energies to the completion of details. The rumor that Mr. Clergue had demanded possession and been refused was contradicted by Mr. Clergue. No meeting was held here yesterday.

Bay of Quinte For Union.

Peterboro, June 4.—At the Bay of Quinte Conference yesterday the following was passed: Moved by Mr. R. H. Barker and seconded by Mayor Chown of Belleville: "Resolved that the lay representatives of the Bay of Quinte Conference desire to express their endorsement of the union of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational Churches, and commend it to the proper authorities."

Montreal, June 4.—Rev. David Winter is president of the Methodist Conference for the ensuing year, having received 149 votes out of a total of 233. Rev. Messrs. Sparling, Lett and Taylor were next in favor in the order named.

700 Sent to Canada.
