

Moren Cochran and Harold Walton took place at S. Barnabas' Church. The Service was rendered even more impressive than usual by the sad circumstances connected with the death of the two boys. They had gone out on the afternoon of Nov. 20, and were caught in a snow storm. Drifting with the storm they appear to have gone some fifteen or twenty miles away, when probably exhausted by fatigue they laid down to rest. They had picketed their horses, taking the saddle blankets to keep themselves warm. It is thought that during the night Moren Cochran must have awaked and finding his companion dead, struggled on after having wrapped the body in the blankets. He reached a stack, and there fell, holding his pony by the rope by which he had been leading him. The bodies were found on Sunday, 22nd. The procession formed at Mr. Cochran's house, and went from there to the church. Hymns were sung during the Service. Moren Cochran had long been a member of the Sunday School.

During Advent, addresses have been given on the preparation necessary to the season.

The work of choosing a cemetery has progressed well, and soon it is hoped that the Church will possess its own peculiar portion in a general ground, which will be consecrated.

Fort Pelly.

We commenced our Patronal Festival on the eve of S. Andrew, when a special sermon was preached and the Service was choral.

On S. Andrew's Day there was a fair congregation at the morning Service, and twelve Communicants.

In the afternoon, the school children and junior members of the choir were given a tea, and the "old wives" kindly came and helped the Incumbent to look after the children and attend to them, and to cut up the bread, cake, and tarts, which some of the elder girls had kindly made for them; and after tea there was a big scramble for candies, and the "old wives" seemed to like candies quite as much as the youngsters, to judge from the way they rushed into the thick of the fight for them. All the school children received a little present of some clothes and cards which had been sent for them by our kind friends (the W. A.) in Eastern Canada. Just before Evensong one of the wardens, and member of the choir, was married, and we offer him our best wishes for his future welfare and happiness. After Evensong the wedding party and senior members of the choir were entertained at the Mission House. The Services were choral throughout, and the choir deserves great praise for the creditable way in which they rendered their part of the Service. This is the first choral Service we have had since our esteemed organist left us, and though unaccompanied, the choir bravely led the singing and the praises of the congregation.
