HON. JOHN HAGGART.

THE gentleman pictured above occupies the high and responsible position of Minister of Railways and Canals in the Government of the Dominion of Canada. This office came to him as the reward of lofty talents and excellent conduct. He has not long enjoyed it, but it goes without saying that he will perform its duties with the same remarkable ability, honesty and industry which he displayed in his former position as Postmaster General. Mr. Haggart's position as a statesman is a proud one. He has sometimes been named in the same day with Gladstone, but the two men differ so much in small details that a comparison can hardly be made between them. His administrative talents are vast and brilliant, but after all it is as an example to the young men of Canada that he is chiefly useful. He is a shining instance of a self-made man. His career goes to prove, indeed, that to reach a very high place in Canadian Government circles nothing whatever is required except a "pull," and the knowledge of how to use it.
