EAST ANGLIA. Personal Recollections and Historical Associations. By J. EWING RITCHIE.

'Mr. Ritchie always works conscientiously and apart from the mere compiler of books, and at the same time always contrives to give his information in that pleasant and genial way which reminds one of the gossip of an old and privileged friend. Mr. Ritchie is a Suffolk man—the son of a Nonconformist minister of Wrentham in that county—and he looks back to the old neighbourhood and the old times with an affection which is likely to communicate itself to his readers. His field extends to the whole of that corner of England which is generally included under the designation chosen for the title of this volume; and it is clear that he knows the county well, together with its associations both biographical and historical. The reader will perhaps be surprised to find how respectable—we may even say how illustrious—an assembly in literature, divinity, law, science and art are the Norfolk and Suffolk worthies; nor have these counties failed to take an important place in English annals. But the author's purpose is not so much to remind us of all this as to linger over his personal recollections of men and places, and to recall scenes which have a significance as illustrating character or bygone phases of manners, while mingling with all this many anecdotes which have a pleasant flavour. As his recollections extend back to the days of unreformed Parliaments and thence onward through the stormy period of reform, we need hardly say that politics and political feeling in these parts also furnish him with much matter for his pages, and this not the least interesting. It may perhaps be imagined from this that the work appeals to East Anglians alone, but this would be to leave our reader under a mistaken impression, as the work will be found to have a special interest to all those who care to know something of their country's history—topographical, historical and geographical.—Pictorial World.

CHRISTOPHER CRAYON AMONG THE GOOD SAMARITANS.

'Some nineteen philanthropic institutions in London and its vicinity, beginning with the Cat and Dog Hospital and ending with Dr. Barnard's coffee palace at the East-End, are graphically described in the shilling brochure, "Christopher Crayon Amongst the Good Samaritans" (James Clarke and Co.). Mr. Ritchie has probably had a longer experience in visiting and sketching such places than any other member of the metropolitan press; and he has a happy knack in conveying all the salient facts in a pleasant gossip style that is appreciated by thousands. His latest work is full of suggestive hints for those who are seeking to do good.—Christian Leader.

CHRISTOPHER CRAYON IN SCOTLAND; or, From the Strand to Stornoway. Being a reprint of 'Yatching in the Hebrides,' and other papers.

'The book will amuse travellers over the same ground, and it is just the thing for them to buy at a railway bookstall. It is the journal of a man out for a holiday, written for others who are in like case.—Mr. SPURGEON in The Sword and Trowel.
