$39.65 EVERY TIME TYRUS RAYMOND COBB HIT THE BALL

Every time Ty Cobb made a base hit during the season of 1912 he earned $39.65, according to figures of Herman Weeks, in The St. Louis Times, and according to the same busy little statistician in 1910 he was paid at the rate of $45.92 per safety while in 1911 he made $56.29 per swat, fielding and base running not considered in figuring his compensation. Does it pay to play baseball? Tyrus Raymond has been drawing a salary of $5,000 for his services each of the last three years. Now Ty's contract has run out, and he wants another calling for $6,000 more, and may get it. In the last three years, according to Weeks, Ty has made 871 hits, while his salary for the same length of time was $27,000. If Cobb were getting paid for making hits alone he would have received more than $40 for each safety, which is some payment for swinging the bat and hitting the ball "where they play."

If Cobb were getting paid for this alone, his most profitable year so far would have been 1910. In that season he made 196 hits at a salary of $5,000, which would have given him $45.92 for each hit. A glance at it may be seen that a ball player living.

In 1912 Ty made 248. binges, for which he received an average of $31.29 each. This was his poorest year, when the amount of spend is taken into consideration, but at that it is a very nice little sum. For each hit in the 1912 campaign he gathered in $39.65. All in all, he has lived for each single in the last three seasons the wee sum of $40.25 each.

This demon Tiger outfielder started his professional baseball career in 1904, when he played the start of the season for the Anniston, Ga., team, and swatted .870. He then went to Augusta, where he stayed until the wind up in 1905, when he went to the Tigers, and with which team he has done such wonderful work with the bat.

He batted .300 his first year in the majors and then just kept getting better all the time. His best year with the bat was in 1911, when he led the league with .420. Last season he batted .417, and also topped the batter in the Ben Johnson organization. The demon Tiger has led the league in hitting the last six years straight. His grand average since he has been playing baseball is .361.

Cobb's batting and fielding marks show he started playing professional baseball:

1904	Anniston	27	.870	.946
1905	Augusta	37	.237	.946
