The problem of trying to reconcile the interests of agriculture with urgent mili- tary needs is a difficult one for the do- minion government. When the Military Service Bill was introduced it was con- fidently believed that 100,000 men could readily be selected for the army from the 600,000 in class one estimated still to be in the country, without curtailing food production. It was not foreseen that virtually every man called out would apply for exemption, and that the mach- inery of the act could not meet the de- mands on it. It is probable, too, that if the act had been framed in the midsi of such a crisis as now exists in the theatre of war the exemption clauses would have been drafted with a less lenient hand. After four months of operation the act has yielded less than 14,000 men phy- sically fit for the front, and its break- down coincides with the most desperate phase of the war. Canada must rein- force her fighting men unless she is con- tent to do less than her duty. The new application of conscription is mild in- deed compared with the burden laid up- on the mother country. More men are needed to save the world from the Hun and greater crops are needed to save the Allied countries of Europe from actual hunger. The German hordes must be stayed, whatever else happens. The oat- tlefield has undeniably the first claim It is impossible to exempt every mat at present working on the land without failing the Canadian forces in a dire emergency. But as far as possible the place of every man taken from the sol- must be supplied by labor from the cotties and towns. The appeals for this purpose which are being made must be continued with tenfold emphasis. Every able-bodied Canadian must be made to feel his personal responsibility. In many cases it will mean the substitution of un- trained for trained labor, but this is om of the misfortunes of war. Industria conseription has been ruled out, but the	mors, the Times adds, is that they are not inherently credible. SAYS NO FOUNDATION FOR FEAR OF WOOL SHORTAGE Salt Lake City, April 25—(Correspond- ence Associated Press)—An all-new- wool suit of clothes consumes but from $5 to $6 worth of wool, and there is a potential supply of 1,115,000,000 pounds of wool to meet an expected consumption of 700,000,000 pounds during 1913, ac- cording to a statement by Dr. S. U. Mc- Clare of Salt Lake City, secretary of the National Wool-Growers Association, in cnswer to the general anticipation of a wool shortage. Dr. McClure said that such anticipation was the work of alarmists, and it has no foundation in fact. There is plenty of wool for everyone, he said and any in- crease in shoddy in clothes is totally un- necessary at this time. Reports that civ- ilians must be satisfied with but one suit each in every four years were pro- nounced unfounded. Dr. McClure's statement says:— T see no reason why the American people should be unduly alarmed about a famine in wool, or why they should cease to wear all-wool clothing, if they desire to do so. Agitators have been shouting wool famine, but the facts do not bear them out. Here are the facts: "The total anount of wool consumed in the United States averaged 410,000,000 pounds a year in 1912-18-14. Then came the European war and we began export- ing some woollen goods to foreign coun- tries and domestic consumption increased also. In 1917 we made large quantities of woollen goods for our army and navy. The result is that in 1915-16-17 the av- erage annual consumption of wool in this country was 600,000,000 pounds. Of this afount probably 100,000,000 pounds. Of this afount probably 100,000,000 pounds went to clothe the army and navy. Thus, it is fair to assume that our average annual consumetion of wool is approximately	<section-header></section-header>

The orderly spoke to the ward physi- cian, the surgeon in charge of the hos- pital telephoned to artillery headquar- ters, and soon afterward an orderly came galloping up the road to the hos- pital and dismounted. He looked in and saw his captain lying on a cot just inside. "Good-morning, captain," he said. "I have brought Bill around." The captain's face broke into a smile. "Have him stick his head in," he or- dered. But the horse had heard a voice he knew and he put his head inside the ward window without any urging. There was his master lying on his back, a small bandage around his head where a little picce of rock hit, and pinned to the pil- low of his cot was a little bronze cross suspended from a green and red ribbon —the Croix de Guerre. For half an hour the captain talked to the horse, feebly stroking the animal's soft nose. The horse apparently kept his nose as close as possible and stood per- fectly still. The surgeon standing near motioned to the orderly after a while and the horse's head was withdrawn from the window. The orderly rode him away toward the batteries. The captain then said to the surgeon: "Well, I feel better. If Bill can come round every day I ought to be moving about in a week or so." So Bill probably will be a regular hos- pital visiter for some days to come. MAKING NEW WORDS. We're going to help the dictionary makers with a couple of suggestions.
