THE BOUNDARY QUESTION.

The English conquest was a whole matter of our own character and quality. Confidence in the result of the deliberations is strengthened here by the fact that neither of the two Canadian judges comes from British Columbia, where the boundary dispute is not unusually affected by geographical conditions. —Brooklyn Eagle.

"Confidence in the result" on this side of the line is not strengthened by the fact that Senator Lodge, one of the American commissioners, is, as he is, an expressed view as to the boundary dispute to Canada and the United States to make it seem almost impossible that he can recognize our rights as to whether clear they are from a purely legal standpoint. In point of ability all of the commissioners are men of eminence and acknowledged ability, and were the men representing our neighbors less identified with the anti-Canadian type of Americans our people would be more hopeful that a satisfactory settlement may be reached. Canadians will continue to hope that Senator Lodge as a judge of facts, may be in no way influenced by his apparently settled conviction that Canadian interests are to be thwarted when ever and wherever possible. And, of course, the commissioners may divide evenly, an outcome which is not desirable from the point of view that the Alaskan question should be settled, but which would be more welcome than a decision which our people would regard as settling Canada's rights.

CANADA'S FATE IN CASE OF WAR

There is no reason why the Montreal Star should express serious anxiety over the New York Sun's assertion that should Great Britain and the United States go to war, Canada would be sacrificed, but the Star's intemperance on the question serves to show how the Sun defeats the purpose it has in view by creating in Canada, where it is frequently quoted, a feeling of dislike toward Americans. The Sun said recently: "It is unquestionably true that Great Britain and Germany cannot afford to fight at the present time, and the Monroe doctrine and other parts of the American policy would be a serious handicap to Germany. The whole cost of the position would be borne by Great Britain. But not only would that power lose Canada, but she would be quickly starved to death."

No such struggle is at all probable. Neither Britain nor the United States lives a war between the two great English-speaking nations will ever occur. "But," says the Star, "it is impossible not to be struck by the cold-blooded way in which this New York paper talks of depriving five millions and a half of people of their liberty and forcing them into a political union which they would utterly reject." —Canada, according to this item, is the property of the British Government; consequently, if the United States has a falling out with the British Government, why, take Canada, and treat the people as so many pawns. The subject is not one for boasting, but there might be some more staggering of humanity before the people of this country would submit to a foreign yoke. The Sun has little idea, probably, what hatred such language as it uses inspires.

The New York Sun never loses a chance to speak of Canada as helpless and bound, and later to become a part of the American Union, but, apparently, the New York newspaper is not studying events intelligently. Every year makes it more and more impossible. And Canadians are so sure of the future of their country that they can afford to regard the Sun's prophesies as amusing.

A SHOCKING TRAINING.

As the sum given to the poor and help less by kind-hearted people increases, there is an increase also in the number and variety of the lazy and depraved who seek to live without honest effort. It is not meant that charity is responsible for the existence of these wretched folk. Indeed in many cases today organized charity pays relatives to watch and arrest dishonest beggars who seek for themselves the alms which is intended for the deserving poor. But the "façons" thrive, and the tricks to which they resort are of the most despicable character. One of these is the training of children in the art of victimizing the charitable.

A case which has attracted much attention in Boston serves to illustrate this shocking training. Passengers in a street car notice a woman of poor but reputable appearance who is accompanied by a little girl. Presently the child asks for something to eat. The woman speaks lovingly to her and says that perhaps she will succeed in getting work that day, in which case they will be able to buy food. The child replies dejectedly: "That is what you said yesterday, but we walked all day and then went to bed cold and hungry." The woman appears ashamed at this disclosure and quietly her. Passengers who have heard the dialogue and who leave the car, one after another, drop money into the woman's lap. A skeptic who followed the woman and the child when they alighted found that some candy was purchased for the girl and that while she ate it outside a saloon her mother went inside where she shared the remainder of the money with a man, and after they had bought liquor, she picked up the child again and they boarded another street car, to repeat the same game.

The training in depravity received by such a child is shocking enough, and similar deceptions are practiced frequently in the larger cities. Yet those who give to their fellows through pity are not always deceived, and the certainty that they have sometimes relieved the deserving in distress keeps the spirit of charity alive in spite of these discouraging revelations.

THE COMMISSION'S FINDINGS.

Generally speaking the findings of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission are favorable to the miners. The men do not get all they asked, and the increase in pay is about half what was demanded. Yet on the whole, organized labor has much to be thankful for as a result of the inquiry. The commission discussed the recognition or non-recognition of the miners' union, but made no decision in regard to it because the question was not regarded as within the scope of the inquiry. Yet recognition is regarded by both parties to the controversy as of immense importance, and the matter may come up again.

The interesting question now is Are the findings of the commission such as will prevent another strike in the near future, and especially before the presidential election next year? Seemingly they are, but it is too early to say just how the awards will be received. Without going into the report in detail, it appears that the commission recommends a general increase of wages, amounting in most cases to ten per cent. Some reduction is made in the time of men paid by the day, but the decrease does not amount to the eight-hour work day which was sought. It approximates a nine-hour day. The commission recommends also the settlement of all disputes by arbitration; fixes a minimum wage and a sliding scale; provides against discrimination of persons by either the mine owners or the miners on account of membership or non-membership in a labor union, and provides that the awards made shall continue in force until March 1906.

The commissioners are opposed to compulsory arbitration. They speak of "cool and iron police" maintained by one of the companies as undesirable, apparently believing the maintenance of a private force by the operators creates irritation, and that the preservation of order should be left to the regularly constituted authorities. It is true that men employed and armed by the companies have frequently been the cause of provoking violence, and the practice has been growing in unpopularity ever since the Homestead riots. The commission acquiesces in the principle of the charge of encouraging violence, but finds that the heads of some of the major organizations were blameless in this respect. The report says "the present constitution of the United Mine Workers of America does not present the most inviting inducement to the operators to enter into contractual relations with it." President Mitchell interprets this as meaning that the union includes many bituminous mine workers. The strike leader is quoted as expressing much pleasure over the commission's report, particularly the recommendation for a nine-hour day and a board of conciliation. He says the ten per cent increase means an additional six millions annually for the miners of Pennsylvania.

In advising the establishing of a board of investigation by the state and federal authorities, the commissioners express the opinion that if such a body had been in existence last June the coal famine might have been averted. They evidently believe that arbitration and conciliation will prevent a repetition of the strike. The suffering due to the strike has created a strong public sentiment in favor of arbitration and either men or employers who failed to take advantage of every reasonable plan to prevent renewed labor troubles certainly would be strongly condemned by the public at large. In that way the coal famine was not without its use. The country is very sure that it does not want another strike, and the pinch of the past winter will have its influence in alienating sympathy from miners or operators should either seek to be courting trouble hereafter.

Just how much the commission has accomplished cannot be estimated accurately today. Perhaps it has succeeded in postponing for some time a battle which is inevitable.

NEW BRUNSWICK QUESTIONS.

Premier Tweedie and Attorney General Pugsley were interviewed in Montreal on Saturday by a representative of the Grand Trunk Pacific and afterwards told a Telegraph correspondent that any influence the New Brunswick government could exert would be directed toward making St. John the Atlantic terminus of the proposed trans-continental road.

The principal business calling the Premier and the Attorney General to Ottawa was the matter of New Brunswick's representation in parliament and the Fisheries Award. They conferred with our members of parliament who agreed that this province is entitled to retain its present number of representatives, as conceded by the provincial government, and promised to make the best fight they could in defence of New Brunswick's rights in the matter. In addition to the minute of council recently passed at Fredericton and forwarded to Ottawa, Hon. Messrs. Tweedie and Pugsley have directed the attention of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to a report made in 1870 by Sir John Macdonald, who was then Minister of Justice, in regard to the representation of the newly constituted province of Manitoba, in which he expressed the view, now held by the New Brunswick ministers, that the British North America act deals only with the proportionate representation in parliament of the four original provinces.

To the Telegraph's Montreal correspondent the provincial ministers expressed themselves as well pleased with the present position of New Brunswick's claims in respect to the important interests they had sought to protect at Ottawa. The New Brunswick view—held generally by all classes—is that our representation cannot be reduced with justice or safety, and that the province is entitled to its share of the Halifax award, which great sum could be devoted to the heavy expenses of the province. As the Grand Trunk, it is of the greatest importance that this port be kept to the fore in connection with any plans which may be made relative to the building of another railroad across the continent.

THE MANUFACTURERS AND THE TARIFF.

"Let the people know all about it," said Hon. Mr. Fielding to the manufacturers when they talked about informing the government "in confidence" concerning the tariff changes they think advisable. "To treat such a matter in the light of a confidential communication," says the Toronto Globe, "is to be doubly acquiescent in the assumption that it is the men who profit by, and not the men who pay, our Federal taxation who should have the chief voice in determining how it shall be levied."

The Globe adds: As it has taken the manufacturers so long to arrive at a series of compromises mutually to embrace among themselves, they have a good idea of the difficulties in the way of adopting comprehensive anti-factory also to the many interests which suffer through obstructions to trade. Mr. Fielding was right in deciding that the whole community should know and discuss every proposed change. The fallacious argument has been resurrected that the tariff can be helped only by injuring others, and that the best ground for sustaining Mr. Fielding's position, that the whole community, the buyers as well as the sellers, are directly interested in tariff changes.

The farmers already regard the manufacturers' demand a general increase in the tariff with uneasiness and suspicion. Opposition to the high tariff campaign will be increased by the seeming admission of the manufacturers' delegates that they are unwilling to take the public into their confidence. As the Globe says, the country wants no "confidential tariff policy." Tariff stability at this time of great prosperity is what Canada requires.

GLIMPSES OF THE PAST.

The Telegraph publishes today the first instalment of the history of the River St. John and early events in New Brunswick, by the Rev. W. O. Raymond, a narrative which is peculiarly fitted to write, and which, interesting in itself, becomes more timely because of the approaching tercentenary of the discovery of the river by Champlain.

The articles will touch upon the history of the stream from the time when the Indians alone inhabited these provinces, down to the Loyalist period. When complete, the chronicles will be published in pamphlet form. The story is one which must command the attention of all who are interested in the early life of this region, and who would know the history of places and personages when the country was virgin. The first chapter, a portion of which will appear in tomorrow's issue, will deal with the Ma'isees, or Mi'icutes, and the Indian period of our history. The River St. John Indians were savage enough, joining, as they did, with their neighbors in a war looking to the extermination of the whites in Maine and New Hampshire. Yet they had the excuse—good enough for the Indian, as are doubtless in his place—that good enough for us in his place—that they were defending their heritage from the invader.

It is a moving story, this of the river and its people in the early days, and The Telegraph is fortunate in being able to present to the public the interesting chronicles compiled by one who has given the subject much attention and whose study of the early days has him so well for the work he has undertaken.

THE TOURIST BUSINESS.

The proposal to amalgamate the tourist associations of the province meets with unfair objection from the Fredericton Herald, which says, in part—

Fredericton has had reason to complain in the past because of St. John interference with tourist travel in this direction. It is no secret that certain influences in St. John have been exerted to detain tourists in that city, when they desired to make the trip to Fredericton and enjoy its beauties.

This criticism is unjust to St. John, and it ignores the chief purpose of amalgamation, which is to greatly increase tourist travel to and in New Brunswick. First, in regard to the St. John association, the annual booklet contained 42 pages, of which only six dealt with the city, the rest being devoted to Fredericton and the province generally, and directing travel to sections which did not contribute to the cost of publication. The report of Treasurer Warrick, of the N. B. Tourist Association, shows that $1,181 was spent in publishing the provincial booklet, or more than the association received from the provincial government. Much of the total amount expended was for the benefit of the province, rather than St. John, which, because of its position, naturally was much benefited by the visitors.

St. John did not discriminate against Fredericton. It is, of course, true that the hotel men in every city are anxious to have their guests remain, and that the hotel men here did not hurry the visitors on to Fredericton, any more than the Fredericton men urged their guests to hasten to St. John. But the transportation companies are as much interested in keeping the travelers on the move as the hotel men are in having them stay, and the transportation people bring them to the province in the first place, and inform them regarding the more attractive places to visit, without prejudice.

The one subject in view now—and it is in the interest of every section alike—is to swell the tide of travel. It has been urged, and with reason, that the best way to do that is for the associations to unite and have to direct their central bureau a competent man, paid to devote his entire time to the work. There would be no discrimination against any point, no favoritism, and the certain result would be that Fredericton, like every other place, would profit by increased business. What has been done heretofore by volunteers it is now proposed to do systematically, that New Brunswick may secure the travel to which its magnificent scenery and glorious summer climate entitle it. There is no "St. John scheme" in it, as the Herald seems to fear, and it is to be regretted that sectionalism enters into the discussion at a time when united action is so necessary and promises such good results.

Kingston, Kings County, News.

Kingston, Kings County, N. The doctor, in a neat speech, replied, thanking the company for the surprise and pleasure they had given them. Mrs. Keith also thanked the ladies and gentlemen present for the pleasant surprise and the pleasure of their company. Supper was served at 12 m., after which the company departed, wishing the doctor and his wife many years of happiness and prosperity.
