The "ANCHOR" Davenport

"Just as Easily Erected as an Iron Bed"

THE "Anchor" Davenport is the only Davenport on the market that is constructed on the same principle as an Iron Bed, and that can be taken to pieces and erected just as easily. The design is absolutely without mechanism, and is simplicity itself. It cannot get out of order, and commends itself to the housewife particularly for this good reason. As a beautiful article of furniture it is unexcelled, the frames being of superb quarter-cut oak, while the large range of coverings afford wide scope for your choice. The fact that the back is used only as a back, and not to form part of the bed is a great advantage, as it thereby retains its finished appearance which would be impossible were it to be used as a bed. The spring itself is guaranteed not to sag and has no hard centre.

If you are interested in a superior Davenport, at a medium price, send along a postal, and we will mail you at once a beautiful three-color catalogue that will give you full description of our several designs. When writing mention the Home Journal.
