

was commemorated by special services, many of which were of an official character.

In Teheran an impressive service in the Protestant Church was attended by the Princes, the Grand Vizier, Ministers, high officials, the Diplomatic Corps and all the Europeans. In Jerusalem a service was held in St. George's Church. The Consuls and local authorities attended in uniform.

From Dresden, Trieste, Tangier, Port Said, Funchal, Vienna and scores of other points the story was repeated. In every case the services were attended by the local authorities and representatives of the Courts.

Following are reports of how the day of mourning was observed in various places on the Continent :—

Paris.—Flags draped with crape floated from the Elysée and all public buildings, and every English place of business was closed. At eleven o'clock in the morning the official services in the English Church in the Rue d'Aguesseau were held in the exact form of the services in St. Paul's, London. There was a distinguished attendance. M. Combarieu represented President Louhet. Mme. Loubet was also present, as well as General Zurlinden, Roland Bonaparte, Admirals Gervais and Duperre, General André, President Fallières, of the Senate; President Dechanel, of the Chamber of Deputies; Premier Waldeck-Rousseau, most of the members of the Ministry, United States Ambassador Porter and Mrs. Porter, and most of the Diplomatic Corps. In the same church in the afternoon services were held by the English colony. In the American Church in the Avenue de l'Alma services were held at five o'clock for the American colony. The United States Ambassador and Mrs. Porter attended.

After the official services in the English Church were over the members of the British Embassy stood in full diplomatic uniform at the door to receive the condolences of the official world, and it was observed that while the French and other dignitaries contented themselves with a formal bow to the head of the Embassy, General Porter, the United States Ambassador, shook hands with the whole line, not forgetting the attachés, one or two of whom are mere boys, under twenty years.

Memorial services were also held in Mentone, Nice, Marseilles, Pau, Bordeaux and many other places in France.

St. Petersburg.—Memorial services were held in the English church in the morning. The British Ambassador, Sir Charles Scott, received the Czar,
