

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

N.B.—The following bibliography is restricted to the authors mentioned in the foregoing essay. Some of them had their works published both in England and the United States, and, in a very few instances, I may have quoted from, or referred to, such editions as I possessed before the loss by fire of my original library, instead of those I now have. One of the objects of these few pages is to record those instances, so that the reader who could not find the passage alluded to in the edition I mention in the foot-notes may be moved to try another one.

A second object I have in view in presenting the reader with this list of books is to give fuller titles and, in some cases, reveal by the dates mentioned therein the epoch of the voyages and explorations which yielded the results I have utilized in the course of the foregoing paper.
