various cities, at many points along the 49th parallel and on certain historical sites, all carrying a tablet on which a joint message from the King of England and the President of the United States would urge the continuance forever of peace between the Englishspeaking peoples of the world. We also hoped that this tablet might be erected in every high school, college and university throughout the British Empire and the United States, so that the next generation would accept as a fundamental factor in international relations the principle that those who speak English do not fight one another. Many of the functions I have mentioned may never take place, but the monuments will I hope arise after this terrible war has passed, and they will doubtless seem to be grander tokens of what is possible between two ambitious but right-minded nations than they would have seemed but fo 'e war.

0

g

e

ρſ

ee

ly

ne

ne

at

n-

n,

ci-

be

esew

shnd

ny

of nu-

on, in "We contemplated a histo, of the relations of the United States and Great Britain during this hundred years, so that students might how what the years of peace have meant, what dark moments of anger there have been, what rough places to pass over, and what problems to be solved that might easily have