SPECULATIVE MARINE RISKS.

New York underwriters say that exporters of cotton to Germany are trying to get insurance on vessels that would not be insured for constwise yorages, and one would not be insured for coastwise voyages, and one case is mentioned of a man who tried to get $50,000 of the insurance on a steamer that he had no notion of bringing back to this country, but intended to break up after getting her to the other side. Another effort by dhippers is to get insurance on the value of cotton n Bremen instead of on its value in New York.
