

SONG OF MANITOBA

Sing a song of Manitoba,
Sing a song of Manitoba,
Spent like random shots,
Up in Manitoba,

PITCHERY - BIDGERY.

The Turning of the Long, Long Lane.

BY MONSIEUR DEMOLIN.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE RADINAGE OF OLD FRIENDS.

The town of Holly is situated on the coast of Pembroke. It has a small harbor, with a light-house, and the town itself contains a few thousand people, most of them belonging to the poorer class.

The house, from its appearance, must have been built more than a century before. It belonged to an old family which had become extinct, and now was occupied by a new owner, who had given it another name.

On an afternoon in February, a gentleman in clerical dress walked up the avenue, rang at the door, and entering gave his name to the servant as the Rev. Courtney Despard.

He entered the drawing room, sat down on one of the many lounging chairs with which it was filled. He did not have to wait long. A rapid step was soon heard descending the stairs, and in a few minutes a lady entered.

Mrs. Thornton was very striking in her appearance. A clear olive complexion and large, dark hazel eyes marked her southern blood.

"You are never at a loss for a compliment," said Despard, with some mournfulness, looking at the floor.

"Anything that comes from you could not be otherwise," said Despard. "It is the same time it is not my habit to read novels simply."

"I always read several at a time," Mrs. Thornton laughed at the whimsical idea.

"You see," said Despard, "one must keep up with the literature of the day. I used to read each book as it came out, but at last I found that I had to invent a new plan to stimulate my interest."

"What an admirable plan! And do you read all the books in that way?"

"I have not read more than a few," said Despard, "but I have written several novels, and I have been looking at some pictures, and I have been looking at some pictures, and I have been looking at some pictures."

"You are forgiven," said Mrs. Thornton, "I can not conceive how I could have so forgotten myself. I do not usually speak Greek to ladies. I consider it my duty to make myself agreeable."

"I have no idea," said Despard, "but I have no idea how agreeable I can make myself. I have no idea how agreeable I can make myself."

"You may try if you wish. I am open to conviction," but the Church of all the ages, the Apostolic, the Catholic, has a strong hold on me."

usually extravagant remark, Mr. Thornton looked up in perplexity, which was not lessened on seeing their perfect gravity.

They had a long discussion as to the meaning of the phrase "the day after tomorrow." Despard asserted that it meant the same as eternal duration, and insisted that it must be so, since we still come and go, and when that came there was still the day after.

Then the subject of politics came up, and a probable war with France was considered. Despard professed to take no interest in the subject, even an invasion took place, clerical men could do nothing.

explore from this time forward in past, as St. James Oil, applied in time in case of rheumatism, has a wonderful way of knocking that nasty old foe of people, it certainly relieved me of a severe pain in my shoulders."

A Garden for the Children. Children love flowers, says the London Globe, "as ducks love water"; and they take the finest pleasure in giving of their own to friends, and especially to the sick or the grieving.
