

SHYLOCK DEAD.
Alone and broken hearted, with the dew
Of death upon his eyelids and his eyes—
The mist that hangs on this side Paradise—
He called upon the Mighty One he knew,
The God of Abraham and Isaac, who Could come to him, on flaming wings
Of fire,
And grant at last his weary soul's desire.
So let him die, as he had lived—a Jew.
Where his long-suffering tribe no base
badge wear,
But walk in shining robes of glory drest,
Where psalms and songs float ever on the air,
Old Shylock sought and found eternal rest.
Found he long had yearned for, waiting
there.
Found sweet content and peace on Leah's breast.

"KISS ME, TOO, PAPA."
"Hand me that collar button," demanded George Wellsby, with an annoyed air toward his little girl. "Learn to let things alone, will you? There now, tune up and howl." "George please don't speak to the child that way," said Mrs. Wellsby, depositing a shirt for him on the chair. "Well why can't she behave herself? Every time she sees that I am getting ready to go any place, she makes a point of hindering me. Let that cravat alone!" "Put down papa's cravat darling!" said mamma. "But she's too young to know any better." "No she isn't. Other people's children know how to behave. I'll miss the train. I am sometimes tempted to wish she'd never been born."

"Oh, George," exclaimed the wife, "I wouldn't say that." "Confound it, she worries me so. I haven't more time to catch the train," hurriedly kissing his wife.
"Kiss me too, papa." "I ought not, you are so bad," stopping and kissing her, "Good by. I'll be back in three or four days."

Mr. Wellsby is a commercial traveller, a kind and tender-hearted man, but subjected at times to nervousness. Seated with several vivacious acquaintances, speeding over the country, a little voice would steal between the roars of merry laughter and say: "Kiss me too, papa."

In the sample room of the village hotel, between the inquiries of purchasers, he could hear the voice; and at night when he lay down he could see the little hands reaching toward him and could hear: "Kiss me too, papa." At morning when the sunbeams fell across his bed, he thought of the bright little face at home and said: "God forgive me for wishing she had never been born." On a night train going home, he could see the little hands and hear the "kiss me, too; kiss me, too."

"What's the news?" he asked of a friend, when he had stepped upon the platform and called a hackman. "Nothing, I believe; everything's quiet." "No scarlet fever or diphtheria raging is there?" "No, not that I have heard." The familiar scenes brought rest to his mind. He looked back upon his trip with a shudder, like one who awakes and contemplates a nightmare through which he has just past. "Good night," he said, paying the hackman. "A light burning. Julia is expecting me," he roused, ascending the steps. A ghastly face met him at the door. A voice in agony whispered: "Oh, George, our little girl is dead."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

GROWING PLANTS FOR EXHIBITION.

Whether the largest vegetables should always receive the prizes at exhibition, we much doubt. An English seedsman advertises a new pea as "a capital exhibition pea," and we learn that it has larger pods with larger peas and more of them, than any other variety. Productiveness, so important to the market gardener, and quality so important in the home garden, are disregarded; if a pea produces a few enormous pods, it at once takes high rank as an "exhibition pea." An English gardener, who has been remarkably successful in carrying off the prizes for onions, gives in a recent "Gardener's Chronicle" his method with exhibition onions. The ground receives a heavy dressing of well-rotted manure in November, it being dug in, and the surface left rough until early in January, when a good dressing of soot is applied on the surface. Early in February the beds are raked, etc., and the seed sown. When the seedlings are well established, they are thinned to nine inches apart, and the surface of the soil is covered with spent mushroom-bed manure. Afterwards, the onions are treated to pigeons' dung, and a commercial fertilizer. That this treatment should yield bulbs weighing from one pound six ounces to one pound twelve ounces, is not surprising, but in what way it improves the general crop of onions, we are unable to see. Thinning onions to nine inches apart, would not pay for any other purpose save for exhibition. We doubt if horticulture is greatly promoted by this course.—Dr. Thurber in American Agriculturist for Jan.
