The Reunion

on the Sands.

The night is calm, save for the gentle breeze

Which, like a whispering phantom,

Whispers by,

And doleful is the music of the seas

As on their breast the tired moonbeams lie.

But stay! a graceful form glides o'er the sand

On which the shells and waves make melody

And, like a queen, she stretches forth her hand

Commanding the attention of the sea.

Her voice is clear, yet tremulous and deep

And like the balmy waters of a stream;

Or songster's echo when the world's asleep,

Or like the memories of a tender dream.

"Oh! Sea, you whispered low this night last year

When he, my love, and I did wander by"

But now you hold all life held for me dear—

You're taken all—and now Oh! let me die!

But tell me, in that world of dreams above

Of which we taste the
