the ages exceed 70 years, which is the British age limit for pensions.

Here, in Canada where the pace is greater, life altogether more strenuous, and climatic conditions possibly more exhausting, the suggested 65year limit would be a fair enough equi-valent to the old country limit. Then. assuming that there are in Canada 334,000 persons over 65 years f age, as laid down by Mr. White probably not half that number would apply, or could become qualified for pensions under any reasonable debar-ring income clauses. If the mother country finds it a fairly good workng scheme to have the debarring in come limit fixed at $150 per annum one would fancy that a $200 income limit might equally well serve Can ida.

The British pension rate is approxi nately $1.25 per week. Canada might get along with a rate, let us say, $2.50 per week Therefore, taking half the number of tersons over 65 as a pro-able basis, the total sum per annum that would have to be expended in reof pensions would be about $21, 10.000. As some offset to this there would be infinitely less call upor charitable sources as compared with the present haphazard forms of relief Administration would, of course, some what swell the above estimate, but here again the system of the mother ountry might be adopted with adantage.
