

economically. The materials used are inexpensive, but appropriate. School girls from the tenement districts are learning how to cook sustaining meals, to care for infants, to keep house on sanitary principles. It is gratifying to know that a similar work is carried on by our own Fred Victor Mission, and that domestic science is gaining an increasing place in our educational system.

A NEGLIGIBLE QUANTITY.

John Redmond: "Well, my weight doesn't seem to matter much now."
—Partridge in the London Punch.

Religious Intelligence.

THE NEW EVANGELISM.

Not far from City Road Chapel, London, is the new Leysian Mission, a splendid incarnation of the devotion and zeal of the cultured young Methodism of the world's metropolis. A devoted band of Christian workers, many of them of university culture and learning, have organized an aggressive forward movement, have erected a magnificent hall, the interior of which is shown in the accompanying cut, have made it a humming hive of Christian industry and enterprise. The missionaries go out in bands at night scouring the neighborhood, into the highways and byways of London life, almost literally compelling the people to come into the soul-saving services.

This is not, as will be seen, an uncouth, unkempt, unembellished mission hall, but a splendid auditorium whose graceful architecture would suit the most cultured audience in the great metropolis. Here the poor are welcomed, and music, song and sacred eloquence are employed to win them to a nobler life. There are suites of rooms for every possible use of an institutional church; and all this within a stone's-throw almost of the Old Foundry where John Wesley held his services, often before daylight, and established those schools, dispensaries, and soul-saving services which have spread throughout the land and throughout the world.

This is described as the largest mission plant in the world. The Prince and Princess of Wales and other patrons of high rank were present at the opening