eafants into the greatest The linen hing, never by higher improving, did before. liften to our amphleteers, and oppref-comes it to our glorious eming profhe brink of s plain and m would fet . But what anfwer this , a Reform hat Reform fferent manancipationof Governr making an lifting a Reindeed, be a etely; but as partial Reo much mif-a Member of ? Why each whom would the loudeft would this be? character to ne Houfe, in mnife he had

bt know what ly of that deetween a Romau L 9]

man Catholic of my rank in life, and myfelf, with refpect to eur civil franchifes. He votes for a Member in Parliament as 1 do, and is therefore reprefented in Parliament as I am. He has the fame protection of property, and of perfon from the fame laws, in the enacting of which he has the fame fhare. He can purfue his induftry with the fame fecurity, and realize the fruits of it for himfelf and his family by purchafe or otherwife, in the fame way. In what then is he to be emancipated ? Something, indeed, remains yet to be granted, and which a perfeverance in loyalty and quiet would, I am perfuaded, have obtained before this, by which three or four wealthy individuals might gratify their ambition or their vanity; but what the general body fuffers from this point being withheld, or what the granting of it could effect towards a Reform among that defeription of fubjects, is beyond my comprehension to different.

With respect to the power and influence of Government, I never knew a man who, when he was out of office, did not complain of them, and as foon as he got into office, did not exert them, and endeavour to encreafe them. If he leffened them in one way, he took care to extend them in another, and much has lately been attempted in that way by our fate quacks and mountebanks. I do not pretend to fay that abuses may not creep ih, wherever there is power ; but every body knows that four millions of people cannot be governed without some power : and if the supreme magistrate has not lawful power enough to govern them by, either he will not be able to govern them at all, (and then there can be itothing but confusion and mischief) or elfe he must govern them by unlawful means; and I appeal to any man of common fenfe, whether it is not better that a king flould govern according to fixed and fettled laws, which are known to all the nation, than by undue influence, bribery, corruption, and the like. But fay fome, " abolih tithes"—I fear this will not anfwer—I do not expect much towards a reform from wrong and robbery. They who * underftand thofe things tell us, that the fettlement of tithes in thefe realms hath been by the ancient and undoubted haws of the land. When all the lands of England were the demense of the kings, and they enfeoffed the Barons for the defence of the kingdom, referving

* Lord Coke.