The HONOR of the BIG SNOWS

By James Oliver Curwood Author of THE DANGER TRAIL

(Synopsis of Previous Chapters) As Melville, with a young girl, a young man, and a young woman, were sitting in the cabin of the little steamer...

CHAPTER VIII—(Continued)

Would the dogs beat him out? Sloughing in the trail, bleeding at every foot, would they still drag their burden beyond the reach of his vengeance? The fear fastened itself upon him, urging him to greater effort, and he called upon the last of his strength...

CHAPTER IX

Half a mile down the ridge, where it sloped gradually from the forested swamps of the plain, a team of powerful Malenites were running at the head of a toboggan. On the sled sat a young half-breed woman. No outside sledging was at the load of the dogs, cracking his whip and shouting joyously, ran the dogs.

"What is this?" cried Jean. He caught Jean's limp head and shouldered it up in his arms, and called shrilly to Iowaka, who was disentangling herself from the thick furs in which he was wrapped.

"It is the fiddler I told you about, who lives with Williams at Post Lac Beau. He is a fiddler, and he is a good one. He has been murdered! He has been choked to death, and torn to pieces in the face, as if by an animal!"

"He is dead, Iowaka. Look at the purple and black in his face. It is Jean's Groavo who will catch the murderer, and you will stay here and make yourself a camp. Hi-o-o-o!" he shouted to the Malenites.

The team twisted and shifted and swiftly in the trail as he sped over the edge of the mountain. Upon the plain below he knelt upon the toboggan, with his rifle in front of him, and at his low, hissing commands, which reached no farther than the dogs' ears, the team stretched their long bodies in pursuit of the mission and his hubbies.

La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

Something More About the New Year's Honors—Countess Who Became Bride Devotee After Eighty

(Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Company)

Now that the official list of the royal New Year's honors has been received from England, it is seen that Ruler Hagard, the novelist, in lieu of obtaining the baronetcy for which he had confidently looked, announcement of which was cable and widely published, received only an ordinary knighthood, which was likewise all that fell to the share of Valentine Chisol, formerly of the foreign office, now foreign editor of the London "Times," and Joseph Beauchamp, the will manufacturer, father of the late Mrs. Craig (John Oliver Hobbes), the novelist, and Thomas Beauchamp, the opera singer and conductor.

There is a big difference between an ordinary knighthood and a baronetcy, although both carry with them the prefix of "Sir" to the Christian name, in the case of the holder of the dignity of baronetcy, while their wives are officially authorized to prefix either the word "Lady" or "Duchess" to their surnames. In the first place, the baronetcy is hereditary in the male line in order of primogeniture; secondly, it comes a long way ahead of the ordinary knight, in the table of precedence, all the knights of the various orders of chivalry having the "knight" in their titles.

Two honors bestowed on the occasion of the New Year were not called across the Atlantic and the recipients of which are nevertheless well known to many of our readers, were that of Sir John Greville, formerly private secretary of Queen Alexandra, and now paymaster of the royal household, and Arthur Wallis, master of ceremonies to the King, both of whom have been made Knight Commanders of the Victoria Order.

Sir Sidney Greville was always in attendance upon Edward VII. during his annual sojourns in Marlborough and there came into contact with many well-known American people. He is a younger brother of the Earl of Warwick, and his wife, Lady Eva Dugdale, who has been the favorite lady in waiting of Queen Mary since the latter's marriage and comes from a family that may be said to have been founded by Sir John Greville, who in the reign of Henry VIII. married the daughter of Elizabeth Willoughby, the greatest heiress in England at that time.

The post of master of the ceremonies which he holds, was formerly held by Sir Arthur Wallis, whose youngest brother, Reginald, was, until recently, British consul in New York, in the office of which he was succeeded by Sir John Greville, who is now in charge of the royal household in London, and is the brother of the late Duke of Devonshire, and the brother-in-law of the late Duke of Devonshire.

The master is in attendance on the monarch whenever any members of the diplomatic corps are officially received, and is on duty at the coronation of the monarch, and he is also in attendance on the monarch at the coronation of the monarch.

Death of Countess of Macdonald. Queen Alexandra and her children will deeply mourn the death of the Dowager Countess of Macdonald, grandmother of the present King, who died at the age of ninety-one. "Lady Mac" as she was known at court, was a Great-granddaughter of the late Duke of Devonshire, and had been a lady in waiting of Queen Alexandra from the time when the latter was a young girl, until she was a widow.

The present Lord Macdonald, her grandson, is a man of twenty-four, is married, but has no children. He makes his home in London, and is a member of the House of Commons.

Face Paint Tabooed; Remove Skin Instead. "A few years ago only one class of women painted their faces," says Dolly Madison in Chicago News. "It was a sign of social ostracism and was tabooed in refined circles. The custom has become so universal we must admit it is to be deplored and to be shunned as soon as possible."

How foolish to seek artificial "beauty" in this sort of grotesque manner, and how much more commendable to seek a truly natural complexion by the use of ordinary mottled wax. Mottled wax, obtainable at any drug store, is so effective, non-injurious and inexpensive, that it is well worth a trial. It is a simple matter to apply. Applied like cold cream at night, and washed off in the morning, it will keep the skin soft and clear, and prevent the formation of wrinkles. Naturally it takes with it all surface defects.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

JUST about every day of my life I am newly impressed with the vast possibilities of the science of motion study before the science of arranging one's surroundings and training one's self so as to do all routine work with the least and least tiring means possible.

Applied to business establishments, this science has saved thousands of dollars of money. Will you permit me to enter on a little personal history and tell you some of the ways in which I have found motions being wasted in my own household, in order to make my life plainer?

When I was boiling eggs the other day I noticed that I had to take several steps to see the kitchen clock. Three times during the process of boiling those eggs—once to see what time it was when I put them in and twice to see if they were done—I took those steps. Absolutely wasted, and I think I have probably wasted many times a day in that kitchen.

I reached for my dictionary to look up a word one day and suddenly occurred to me that I was demonstrating a motion task. My dictionary is my largest book, and for the sake of appearances has been placed at the further end of my bookcase, and I have to reach over several books to get it. And yet it is the volume I use the most frequently. Needless to say, appearances were thrown to the winds and the dictionary put in its proper place.

Again, there is a large chair at the foot of my bed. Every time I walk around my bed in the process of making it, I must walk around that chair also. Only a few steps, but to save, how many thousand steps in a week, or a year, or a lifetime!

Just one more example. The coal shovel which we put on the furnace coal always stands in the furnace room close by the coal bin, but against a chimney several feet away from that. That means that both before and after we get on coal, we walk several needless steps to get the shovel and replace it. Why does it stand there? Nobody knows. Simply for the reason that someone's household arrangements—that is always.

I know that some better housewives than I am are thinking that none of these tricks I have mentioned will save me a cent, but I am sure that, if you will, I would be too sure that no others do. Perhaps not. Doubtless, these particular ones don't exist in yours, but Madame, I wouldn't be too sure that no others do.

In the arrangement of the pantry, in the arrangement of the garments in your wardrobe, of the china in your china-closet, in your kitchen, and, indeed, all over your house, there are a thousand chances for motion tasks.

Some of the most successful business concerns have found that there were many leaks in their systems. Perhaps you are the same who are in the exception to this universal rule. But, before you decide that, don't you think it would be worth while to look about you and see if you can't find a few motion tasks in your household?

It is and is to relate that, after impeding the completion of a certain task, the first call was received from the channel, as no longer it is to act as official keeper of the records of the business, and the first call was received from the channel, as no longer it is to act as official keeper of the records of the business.

It is only fair to add that it turned out that the business was not a success, and the first call was received from the channel, as no longer it is to act as official keeper of the records of the business.
