A DARKEY BISHOP DISCOURSING UNDER-DIFFICULTIES.

ie Roused His Hearers So Completely That They Couldn't 'East. Until Service Was Over to Express Their Approval —A Specimen Sunday in Florida.

TALLAHASSER, Fla., March 28 .- On Saturday notices were posted about the town in all directions that Bishop Arnott would preach twice on Sunday in the colored church, he being bishop of the diocese of Florida and head of the Methodist persuasion, or rather the colored portion of it. His fame as an able, stirring preacher having preceded him, the building in which he was to hold forth next day became the great Mecca towards which every footstep tended, from far and near-nor were the white gentry (among them many visitors stopping at the hotels), a whit less anxious than the sable brethren to hear the great preacher and crowd the thoroughfares. Soon the building was filled to repletion. The white folks were honored with seats in front, facing a platform about two feet high, and probably ten broad, running the whole breadth of the room, upon which were seated the members of the choir on either side of the bishop and the regular pastor, who occupied seats directly in the centre. On the level of the floor, close beside the platform, stood a cabinet organ, presided over by an excellent performer. The bishop was as dark as ebony, polished at that, for the heat was considerable, added to which the exertion to make himself emphatic caused no small amount of perspiraphate caused no smart and the properties of the physiognomy. The bishop's age is probably in the fitties—of commanding, dignified presence, and having a good sonorous voice, and lung power enough to make it sound in every part of the building and in the neighborhood beyond for that matter; he was always effective and kept his audience upon the qui vive throughout the hour and a quarter which his sermon occupied.

I have heard many able preachers in my day, but seldom listened to one more effective than this colored gentleman—whether as regards language, diction, aptness of illustration, gracefulness of gesture, scriptural references in elucidation of the text, tural references in encountries ("I am not ashamed to preach the gospel of Christ"), his exeges is, his philosophical deductions, home-thrust conclusions, which by the way told most wonderfully upon the lored part of the congregation, who, as the preacher advanced, became responsive, loud, obstreperous, so that the effectiveness only one wife." Here some of the colored folks began to scratch their heads, for the marital relationship in numerous cases in the South is not en rapport among the colored race; with "the table of degrees" set down in our prayer books. From a seat a short distance behind me, went up the response, "dat's rite, bishop, guv't him, I tells him so;" and I inferred that there had been some domestic infelicities between the lawful husband and wife, and this was the opportunity for the latter to let out upon her unfaithful spouse, backed up by the dictum of the bishop; but as soon as the preacher followed up the admonition in the next sentence by saving, "nor must a woman have was Darby's turn to respond, "dat's rite, bishop, givet her: now den, d've har dat derbolt thrown by the bishop into the midst of the camp which scorched more than one couple in that sympathetic congregation. But the responses were so loud offered for sale. The house is two stories offered for sale. paniments I have attempted to describe without a particle of exaggeration, the services of that afternoon would have done no discredit to the best conducted in other churches, as regards sermon and music, where everybody is supposed to keep quiet, in the presence of "the Great King." At the conclusion of the sermon the regular pastor of the flock stepped forward and informed the congregation that he must have $100 on that occasion to pay off the church debt, and he knew that there were three persons present who of themselves could subscribe that amount and not miss individual conclusions, and if so disposed, make up the hundred dollars. The baskets, however, went ahead all the same are a property of the same are all the same are a property of th the organ and the singers let out in right good earnest and at the same time the minister kept calling upon his brethren to shell out. "I must have $100 this day." This he Have Brought Him to the repeated over and over again, an occas-sional remark thrown in, comical enough sional remark thrown in, comical enough to give us all the titters. But the preacher knew how to work upon the enthusiasm of his people, and so by thus hammering away upon the red hot anvil, he could beat them all into shape and thus secure the $100. When the baskets were emptied upon the table, the minister and one of his deacons began to count the money—the singers keeping at it all the time. When it was began to count the money—the singers keeping at it all the time. When it was all counted it was ascertained that the sum all counted it was ascertained that the sum required was nine dollars short. "Come, I must have the balance right off," ciacu-I must have the balance right off," ejaculated the minister. One by one the folks went lorward to the table and put down and got change, as the quarter was all the money they had and they wished to give a dime out of it. In this way the amount was made up—and the minister announced the fact with emphasis. We were also informed that the bishop would preach again in the evening, and for everybody to bring all the money they had.

On the benediction being prono

by the bishop there was a general stampede, precisely as in the case of children being dismissed from school. Every one commenced talking, laughing, shouting even, as if their pent up powers, which had been kept under some discipline for an hour and a half, could endure the pressure no longer, and now came a universal out-burst. The bishop, apparently not accus-tomed to so much of this irreverent, irreligious vocalization, shouted out, as if addressing so many children, "Be quiet—be quiet-be quiet, I say," louder and louder with each repetition; and his stentorian commands produced considerable effectfor after that, and until they reached the doors of the building, the clamor among the crowd was quite moderate; but once outside, and fairly upon the sidewalk, the din was renewed with unction enough to put to flight the armies of Israel.

It must not be supposed by your readers that it is through a spirit of levity that this account is written, or even that it is an attempt to caricature an inoffensive people -much less to make light of matters which should ever demand our most serious consideration. The object on my part is to loud, obstreperous, so that the effectiveness of the preacher was considerably marred through the unseemly, it not irreverent interruptions, such as I will here attempt to describe, for example:

Bishop—"You must be born again, besome a new creature."

Bishop—"You must be born again, besome a new creature."

Bishop—"You must be born again, besome a new creature."

lost no time in getting ready for the work that was cut out for him. At first, a country boy thinking of nothing save school between the hours of 9 a. m., and 4 p. m., and his "tasks" at night, he soon began to show what ability and pluck was in him. Getting beyond the depth of the rural pedagogue was not uncommon in those days, and young Baird was soon able to instruct his former teacher. Then it was that he was sent to that place of discipline and scholarship, the Kingston Grammar school, where such men as Mauger, Wetmore, Scovil and Raymond reigned, and every pupil was a loyal subject. With many other men of the present day Mr. Baird retains pleasant recollections of this well known and famed school. I may be perthat since the removal of the shiretown to Hampton, the old Grammar school building isolated site, and where once nothing heard but the everlasting drill of English nent, and even since the walls which once bore nothing but pencil sketches and blackboards, have been decorated with shelves bearing canned goods and spices. What s change

From 1870 to '74, Mr. Baird was supposed to be a student-at-law. The fact was that he entered about the first date vessel's deck for nearly three years. Getting enough of that he settled down to hard study in the city and bending, every energy to his task, was ready for and passed his attorney's examination in 1874. One year later he was sworn in as bar-coast property fail to pay.

In 1881 he became associated in a professional co-partnership with Mr. G. W. Allen, and later with Mr. W. B. Chandler, which continued until he entered the politi-cal arena. Few people realized at the time what that meant to George F. Baird. He could only run for one county and it seemed little short of madness for him, a Conservative, to expect any show of success in the banner Liberal county of the proit. Some of us thought that this was rather and not inlist in you happen to have any free Bruns.

boyhood rallying around him. He had the ablest and most astute licutenants in the country, and I cannot be blind to the fact that behind all this was a well-filled purse, so necessary, it would appear, to the success of any political candidate. With even all these aids, the county was Liberal, and returned Mr. King by 61 votes.

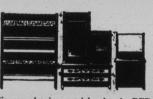

Mr, Baird was declared elected! The returning officer based his declaration on a legal technicality, and Mr. Baird took his seat in parliament. When the session was over, he resigned his seat—which, in my opinion, he should have done on decla-ration day—and a few months later opposed Mr. King again, and was returned as the member for Queens. I can say, without hesitation, that when

Mr. Baird entered politics he lost sight of his own interests. He is better fitted in every way for commercial than political life, and I believe that his greatest successes will be scored, not on the husting his business desk in Palmer's building. It cannot be said that he has not the requirements of a good representative—he shown, more especially this year, that his business talent, applied in the interests of his country, is of great value, and in the eyes of his constituency, which looks, I suppose, to county rather than country, his work must be appreciated. It was only a few days ago that his shipping experience came into action in the house. Certain legislation was proposed regarding the deck-load law, and Mr. Baird, thoroughly conversant with the subject, presented such strong arguments against the passage of

But I would not be surprised if, when the herald sounds the political challenge again, the name of George F. Baird did not appear on the list. His politics interferes with his business. Three months absence at a time is not usually in favor with good business men, and Mr. Baird belongs his shipping interests upon his attention that some time ago law took second place, though even now he never neglects his clients' interests, and is regarded as one of the best maritime lawyers in the province.

Mr. Baird is a self-made man, and as such must command the admiration of lovers of energy and perseverance. He stands today ahead of any self-made man of his age in the province. Personally he is well liked, and no man who knows him has aught to say against his personal quali-ties. When free from the cares of daylight he is an entertaining companion. presents his views in a forcible, ready style, and always gives his listeners sometl
