TEMPERANCE TALK.

The Fallen.

And were ye of the Seekers, ye fallen.
Ye merged in the mire?
When ye clutched so, and stumbled,
and stifled.

Were ye led by Desire,— God's angel of longing, whose task is
To set souls afire?

Too feeble the flame of your burning?
Was passion so pale
Ye could drown it in drafts for the body?

Could nothing avail
To fire you to mightily conquer
Or mightily fall?

Nay, truly, God's angel of longing
Who sets souls afire
Must chafe when the snatched spark of heaven

Falls so in the mire
To sputter in pitiful sinner
And weakly expire.

Use All Methods to Destroy the Power of Whiskey.

The drink question has become one of the most important questions of the age. It is a factor in all social and economic problems. It has passed through various stages of sentiment and experiment and may be said to be fairly launched on an age of reason.

At a time when practical measures are at a premium and directness is a fundamental law, the subject is receiving the most careful attention. The best efforts of some of the best minds are directed towards plans to throttle the demon that has brought degradation and ruin to so many who, but for the blight of whiskey, would have been respected and useful citizens.

Science has declared against the use of alcohol, either as a beverage or medicine. It is a poison, and as such is injurious in both its immediate and remote effects. The man who drinks is gradually but surely undermining his health and paving the way for acute or chronic ailments.

Business men have declared against the use of alcoholic drink. They will not countenance it among their employees. It makes men unreliable and irresponsible. Competition is too close and margins are too small to warrant a possible loss through careless workmen, and there are too many good men out of employment to put up with unnecessary inconvenience. The man who holds his job must deserve it, or he will be discharged to make room for some one who will prove his fitness.

Even fashion, which has been slow to recognize the danger of certain forms of tipping, is gradually yielding to the growing influence, and liquors are tabooed in many homes where choice brands were once dispensed with lavish hospitality.

With Science and Industry both warring against alcohol, there remains but one cause for its use, and that is found in the pleasure it is supposed to bestow, and which, at best, is fictitious. But whether pleasure or stimulation for increased labor is the object sought, the result is always disappointing.

The man who drinks fixes a limit to his achievement. Whatever his natural ability may be, he is doomed to failure if he carries a whiskey handicap. Whiskey and prosperity are enemies. They do not control the same individual. Everything that makes for advancement is built on some power or faculty that whiskey destroys.

The man who succeeds must have quick perception, clear judgment and tireless energy. Strong drink dims the perception, clouds the judgment and paralyzes the energies.

The man who drinks not only loses his place in the financial world, but he jeopardizes his social position as well. Nothing is more fatal to a man's standing among his fellow men than a reputation for drunkenness.

The man who drinks pays a ruinous price for his so-called pleasure. But he does not pay all that it costs in misery and suffering. His wife and children are the ones who are taxed most heavily. They feel the burden of his wrong-doing more keenly than it is possible for him to do. His sensibilities are blunted by liquor. Their faculties are sharpened by suffering.

They realize the cruel injustice of their condition. They have a right to the best care and the best support which a sober husband and father can possibly bestow. But instead of protection and plenty they are neglected and destitute. Instead of looking up to him with pride and fondness they are ashamed of him and dread his coming. If he is one of those whom liquor infuriates, they are afraid of bodily injury, and hide away at his approach. Drinking men are not invariably poor. Sometimes inherited wealth withstands the onslaught of years of inebriety, and occasionally money earned before the unfortunate addiction had developed furnishes means for its continuance. But, rich or poor, the drunkard's home is the abode of wretchedness. In one case there is the ever-present fear, the constant humiliation, the sickening terror lest something worse may happen. In the other case there is all of these tortures, intensified by insufficient food and lack of comfortable clothing.

The drunkard's home is a place of bitter disappointment. He had certain duties toward his family; but apparently he has shirked every duty and turned a deaf ear to the anguished pleading of those who loved him. We say that apparently he has done this. In reality it was not the man but the whiskey that caused the trouble. He has been controlled by a power stronger than love for family or friends, stronger than ambition, and as relentless as it was insidious.

Some of the most hopeless drunkards are, when not in their cups, among the most devoted husbands and fathers. They loathe the bondage that makes them forget their obligations, and many of them make stronger efforts to conquer their addiction than those who curse them would deem possible. But such men fail—not through lack of determination, but through lack of strength to accomplish their purpose. They have been poisoned, and no effort of a weakened will can overcome the effects of the continued use of poison.

Do Your Best To-Day.

To-day! To-day! It is ours, with all its magic possibilities of being and doing. Yesterday, with its mistakes, misdeeds, lost opportunities and failures, is gone forever. With the morrow we are not immediately concerned. It is but a promise yet to be fulfilled. Hidden behind the veil of the future, it may dimly beckon us, but it is yet a shadowy, unsubstantial vision one that we, perhaps, never may realize. But to-day, here and now, that dawned upon us with the first golden hour of the morn, is a reality, a precious possession upon the right use of which may depend all our future of happiness and success, or of misery and failure.

Let us not forget that Time's wings are swift and noiseless and so rapidly bear our to-days to the Land of Yesterday, John Ruskin, philosopher, philanthropist, and tireless worker though he was, kept constantly before his eyes, on his study table, a large, handsome block of chalcone, on which was gaven the single word, "To-day." Every moment of his noble life was enriched—as it enriched the lives of others—by the right use of each passing moment.

John Wanamaker, the successful merchant, upright citizen, and helpful, happy man, very tersely sums up the means by which true success may be attained. "It is just this," he says: "Do your best every day, whatever you have in hand."

This simple rule, if followed in sunshine and in storm, in days of sadness as well as in days of gladness, will rear for the builder a "Palace Beautiful" more precious than pearls of great price, more enduring than time. If it is your misfortune to be a victim of strong drink, take steps to have the whiskey appetite removed at once, to-day, if possible.

Inebriety is a disease and can be cured.

Let me offer you a creed: the creed of work. Young men, work! Life has no other reason for being, and each of us is here only to perform his task. I have always distrusted chimeras. Illusion is bad for a man or a people. The only strong men are the men who work. Work alone gives courage and faith.—Zola.

He that would live happily must neither trust to good fortune nor submit to bad; he must stand upon his guard against all assaults, he must stick to himself without any dependence upon other people.—Seneca.

The mind can only deal with small numbers. The sufferings of a million move us no more than those of a thousand, and those not so much as the suffering of one.—Walter Besant.

"If ever we are in doubt what to do, it is a good rule to ask ourselves what we shall wish on the morrow that we had done."

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. That tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—coaxes blood pressure away from pain centers. Its effect is charming, pleasingly delightful. Gently, though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

If you have a headache, it's blood pressure.

If it's painful periods with women, same cause.

If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets stop it in 20 minutes, and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.

Bruse your finger, and doesn't it get red, and swell, and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is—always. It's simply Common Sense.
