

The movements attending the growth and development of bacteria cells prove their origin in the decomposition and reconstruction of electric charges that make up the atomic growth of water.

The bacteriologist warns the student against ascribing, as a true movement of the spherical cell, the so-called Brownian movement, which is characteristic of any particle suspended in a liquid.

The bacteriologist has failed to notice the fact that there is no movement possible in the jelly as a culture medium, until after the spherical cell has been placed in the jelly, and its power of reducing the solid to a liquid brought about this vibratory motion called the "Brownian movement."

This mysterious "Brownian Movement" is also said to hold the secret of the origin of life, and we must look for an explanation of this secret in electrical phenomena.

Just as the distilled water with its dust particles as centres of force represents a "balanced field of force," as electro-magnetic constructions, so does the jelly represent a "balanced field of force," and when a foreign substance, in the form of a bacteria cell, is introduced into the mass, the electric tension is broken down, and the decomposition of the jelly into a liquid is the result of a reconstruction of the field of ether that held each atom as a fixed point in the mass. Water must always be the first electro-magnetic body formed by the combination of the different motions made up by the different kinds of electric charges, beginning in the ether.

The description given regarding the origin of the elements and of cell life is, of necessity, very limited in detail.

The cost of the work if printed in detail appeared too great for the publisher to assume.

The work being of a very technical character, it was not thought that a sale would be large enough to cover the expense, the illustrations alone making over thirty pages.

The contents of the following pages should, however, establish the indisputable discovery of the origin of the elements and of cell life, also the possibility of control of life itself; when man understands the living phenomena shown in the decomposition of a system of groups of atoms, continually changing their conditions, as growths, because the fields of gaseous electricity changing their places and thus bringing about the decomposition of electric charges, and rebuilding them, are continually "sustaining" their life as an everlasting life in a circumscribed limit.

The cost of the publication is being borne by the writer, in the hope of assisting in the discovery of that which will afford humanity a release from the thralldom of the earth, as a grave. The earth is a leech, and does not release any form of activity from her confines, unless the push of an inner core forces that activity in another direction.

Does the child in the mother's womb conceive of any life without those confines? Yet he is forced from that place, and behold, the possibilities which lie before him.

The earth is the womb of Mother Moon, and the Sun the father
