A CHRISTMAS MEMORY BY ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE.

He believed in a great many things. He was fond of mystery, and some of the things he could not explain he believed in most. Hy knew that a broken stick circled about over a little boy's hand would take off warts, because he had had a great many on one hand and his grown-up cousin had taken them off for him in that way. You had to say some words while you circled the sticks over the warts and then swing it three times about your head and let go of it so that it fell where you didn't see it. Then some day when you weren't thinking about it you would see all at once that your warts were gone.

 \odot

He knew that a dead snake turned over on its back would bring rain. He knew this because once he had found a dead snake and turned it over to see. a dead snake and turned it over to see. They were not needing rain at the time, but that night it poured down in a great flood, and the next day, too, it fell in torrents, until he heard his father say that if it kept on ev-erything would be ruined. Then the little boy slipped guiltily out in the rain and turned the snake back to save the crops. He believed in pulling wishbones, save the crops. He believed in pulling wishbones, for he knew if he got the long end, and then put it over the door, his wish would be almost sure to come true. Along about Thanksgiving time there were a great many wishbones, and the narrow shelf at the top of the door casing was filled with grisly hopes that were mostly to come true

For in the goodness of Santa Claus be believed most of all. His prayers were a great comfort, for they were always ready, and when he said them he was not afraid, even of housebreak ers. His parents he could depend on, too, for his everyday wants, but San-ta Claus was a big, jolly fellow in fur who loved children and who, unseen; and mysterious, came once a year with a sleigh and reindeer to bring real things—the very things they wanted most. His sleigh traveled through the air and over the house-tops. He could come down a chimney of any size with his pack, and he al-ways did come, and the long stockings that the little boy and his sister hunce one at each one at each corner of the mantel, over the fireplace, were always filled.

There was just one Santa Claus, and there was no faith and no feel-ing quite like that on the afternoon before Christmas, when he drove the tack into the back left hand corner of the mantel piece and hung on it his longest and reddest stock. ing, and then sat in different parts of the room to look at it and so make sure that Santa Claus could make sure that Santa Claus could not fail to see it first thing. On other nights he was not al-ways anxious to go to bed. On Christmas Eve he was willing to go before supper time. The morning would come quicker if he was asleep and then he could wake up earlier, too, and get his stocking. To get up early-long before daylight, long be-fore the fires were lit; to race out into the sitting-room and back with into the sitting-room and back with the stuffed, lumpy stocking—this was the one great joy worth the whole year of waiting. Months, weeks, days and at last hours were counted up to that moment. There was nothing beyond it-nothing but to begin the count of another year's waiting.

thing. But like a flash the little boy was out on the icy floor in the dark. Out into the dim sitting-room, where the empty fireplace was cold and shadowy in the first gray of dawn. Then the full stocking that cranched when he hugged it to his breast, and a bound back into his little home-made bed, shivering with a delicious sense of cold and joy. There was something hard and kind of long at the top. That was candy -a big stick of peppermint; he could tell by the feeling and smell. He bit a little piece off of the end of it. How good it was. Nobody ever made such, candy as Santa Claus. He laid it out on the cover and went in deeper. There was a small package next, but it was not the knife. It was soft, and when he opened it it felt woolly. Oh, yees, it was mittens. He tried to see thing. But like a flash the little boy

0

the floor to look at them. Then he for got everything else in the world, for they were pictures of the life and home of Santa Claus! He had seen other such pictures, but never any be-fore like these. There was the work-shop with the old fellow at his bench, and the finished gifts piled around him. There were dolls and playthings with-

of him, sure enough, was a whole row of him, sure enough, was a whole row of pocket knives! . The little boy got down and looked at the pictures very close. Which knife was for him? If he only knew! Then he looked at the other pictures. There was one of Santa Claus starting off with his loaded sleigh, and another one of him just stepping out of a chim-ney into a room where two children were asleep. But in the centre of the were asleep. But in the centre of the page there was the largest picture of

all. It was a great castle amid the icebergs of the far north-the home

On a high battlement stood the old fellow himself. He was leaning over, and with a long spy glass was sweep-ing the world below. The little boy's heart jumped. He knew about spy glasses, and he understood now how it was that Santa Claus could tell the good children from the bad. It was

He lay on the floor looking at the picture and thinking. Had he always been good? He began to have grave doubts. He was not always obedient, of Santa Claus!

number, and there right in front

when he opened it is refer woonly. On, yes, it was mittens. He tried to see what color they were in the dark. They were fastened together with a long knit string. That was to go round his neck. He had wanted mittens like those before he wanted the knife so badly. Then there was a round quite big package that he could hardly get out. That wasn't the knife, of course. He knew it was cookies as soon as he got it open. Real Christmas cookies, with white frosting and red sugar sprinkled on the top. He wondered why his mother never made such good cookies as those. He bit one in two and went deeper. Still no knife. His heart sank a little as he drew out a long roll, that must reach, he thought, to the very end of the stocking. It was a book rolled up, and inside of it was another pack-age of candy-mixed candy this time. He stuffed a gum drop into his mouth and seized the stocking into his mouth and selfed the stocking again. There was something more in it, but it did not feel like a knife. It was kind of big and soft. He drew it out and made sure that the stocking was empty. Then he began to un-wrap. One paper came off, and then another. Still another paper, and yet another paper, and another and an-

SUNDAY SCHOOL

NTERNATIONAL LESSON NO. XIII DEC. 24, 1899.

Christs Coming Foretold .-- Isa. 9: 2-7. Time-B. C. 735-732. Place-Jerusa

1 ersons-Isaiah. Judah. Christ 1 ersons—Isaiah. Judah. Christ. Commentary — Connecting Links. (Kead introduction.) "Israel was rap-idly hastening to its end amid great disorders. The end came about the middle of Isaiah's prophetic work. Hosea' was contemporary in Israel with Isaiah, and with Nahum and Micah in Judah. Possibly, also, Joel in Judah, and Amos and Jonah in Israel Judah, and Amos and Jonah in Israel, may have been still living, old men, in the early days of Isaiah.

in the early days of Isalah. 2. The people that walked in dark-ness-The people of Judah. They were at this time under a two-fold darkness: (1) The darkness of outward trouble. See II. Kings, xv. 37; xvl. 4-8, 17; II. Chron. xxviii. 5-8. (2) They' were in moral darkness. They were attacked by the king of Israel and by the king of Damascus, and afterward by the king of Assyria. Great multitudes were carried captives, or were slain. The s were The king of Assyria. Great multitudes were carried captives, or were slain. The Philistines took permanent possession of the territory which they had over-run, occupying it and adding it to their dominion. Judah was indeed "brought low and made naked." 3. Thou hast multiplied the nation— The prophet shows them the Messiah and His times. He would may them to and His times. He would move them to hope, a waken faith, arouse to right-eousness, by the vision of good times coming. The only way to such a bless-ed consummation was by the path of holiness, obedience and faith .- Peloubet. They joy before Thed-The pro-phet notes it to be a religious joy be-cause it is said to be before Godthat is, in His presence and with a grateful acknowledgment of His bene-fits. 4. Thou hast broken the yoke—The

4. Thou hast broken the yoke—Ine Jews were successively delivered from the burdensome and galling yoke of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians and Macedonians; but these deliverances were only a shadow of redemption from the yoke of Satan; and that re-domption seems here especially prefrom the yoke of Satan ; and that fe-demption seems here especially pre-dicted as if already accomplished.— Scott. As in the day of Midian—As Gideon with a handful of men conquered the hosts of Midian, so Mes-siah, the "child" (v. 6) shall prove to be the "Prince of peace," and the small company under him shall over-come the mighty hosts of Antichrist. See the same contrast in Mic. v. 2.3. the J., F. & B.

5. For every battle-It was the cus 5. For every battle—It was the cus-tom of antiquity to pile the arms of prostrate enemies, the spoils of less value, and their spotted garments, into a heap and then burn them.— Rosewin. All that belongs to war shall be swept away; the war itself shall die. The Messiah abolishes all war; but not until his foes are either swept away by his fudgments or melt-ed into penitence and won over to submission by His love.

swept nwity by his had ments of were to ed into penitence and won over to submission by His love. 6. Unto us—The prophet spake of the predicted blessings as if already communicated. Angels say, "Unto you," but this child was born for the benefit of us men, of us sinners, of all believers, to the end of the world.— Scott. In the far distance the pro-phet foresaw the Redeemer of the world. It is interesting to notice how this promise gradually dawned upon the world through the pro-phets. A little later came the vision of the suffering Saviour (Isa. 53); then the town where He should be born (Micah v. 2); a more complete revelation came through Daniel. A son is given—God's gratuitous gift, mer which man had no claim. John revelation came through Daniel. A son is given—God's gratuitous gift, upon which man had no claim. John lii. 16.—J., F. & B. A gift of love,of joy, of universal fitness to our needs, of eternal enrichment, of forever increas-ing value: and this gift increased ing value; and this gift insures all other gifts. Rom. viii. 32.—Funk. As Son of man Jesus was "a child born"; as Son of God He was a "Son given. -S. urgeon. Government-The ensig ensign of government, the sceptre, the sword, or key, was borne upon or hung from the shoulder. All government shall be vested in Him.-Barnes. His name-A name stands for all that is in the man -his character, his principles and property.-Peloubet. Wo cause His nature was Wonderful- Beboth human cause Ilis nature was both human and divine. Whoever refuses to believe in the supernatural must pause at the manger. He can go no farther. Coun-sellor—One who has wisdom to gnide —himself and others. Jesus was the embodiment of the wisdom of God. A Saviour, both God and man—a per-sonal revelation of God's love, a per-fect character and example, the sum fect character and example, the sum of all motives for being good, the atonement that takes away sin while it forgives, the gift of the Holy Spirit, the institution of the church, its con-tinued guidance, an everlasting but unseen Saviour-all these are proofs of wisdom, divine and limitless. Mighty God-God the mighty One. As He has wisdom, so He had strength; He is able to save to the uttermost; and such is the work of the Mediator that no less a power than that of the mighty God could accompish it. Everlasting Father-Expressing the (1 he love and pity for men, a love that can never fall, for it is everlasting.never fail, for it is everlasting.-Henry, Prince of Peace-As a King He preserves, commands, creates peace. His peace both keeps the hearts of His people and rules in them. He is the autkor of all that peace which is the present and future bliss of His subjects.-Com. Com. Peace is used to everges all the blessings that come to express all the blessings that come express all the dessines the concern to a kingdom where there is peace from outward enemics, peace between rulers and ruled, peace between the differ-ent members of the kingdom; no disorders, no idleness, no criminals.—

exalted them to honor and power. Yet, for all this, we find them walking in darkness and dwelling in the land of the shadow of death. Political and moral darkness enveloped them, and they groped in sorrow and despair. Trophetic light. While the prophet gazed upon the people he saw only foreshadowing death. He saw nothing to recommend them to God. He saw no effort to reform. King and people were plunged into s:n and supersti-tion. When the scene was almost over-whelming God drew his attention to future days. Here the prophet was blessed with a view of the days of the Messiah. He was led to exclaim: "Unto us-yes, unto us a child is born. the Messiah. He was led to exclaim: "Unto us-yes, unto us a child is born, and descended from this very tribe-a child and a Son! Wonderful, was His name; Counselor described His nature; Mighty God told of his high origin; Everlasting Father bespoke His love and gracious care. Messiah's kingdom. It was one of peace. What could be more desirable to a people beset by enemies, and feeling the displeasures of God rest-ing upon their consciences? It prom-feeling the displeasures of God rest-ing upon their consciences? It prom-ised a complete transformation-joy for mourning, and peace instead of war. It told of worship before God, before whom all idols were forbidden. It told of prosperity, with judgment and justice. It is his delight to bring peace to each individual soul. "1. peace to each individual soul. "1 Peace with God. 2. Peace with hea 1. ven, a harmony and sympathy with all that is there. 3. Peace with self; all the various faculties of the nature being in accord and working harmoniously. 4. Peace with men. 5. Peace of an approving conscience. 6. Peace of submissive will. 7. A peace which is eternal, unbroken, perfect."

How to Grow Christmas Trees.

Strings of colored pop-corn fes cooned from limb to limit are pretty and inexpensive: The top of a tree always looks well ornamented with a figure of the patron saint of the Christmas season, St. Nicholas. Small figures of this sort can be bought for ten cents of the dealers in Christ-figures of this sort can be bought for ten cents of the dealers in Christ-mas goods. Bits of cotton fastened all over the tree make a fine imita-tion of snow. A yard of tarlatan costs but a few cents, and may be cut up to make dozens of little boots and hearts, filled with bright colored can-dles and stitched together with bright yarn. Tinsel paper can be cut into cornucopias, the interiors of which are lined with lace , paper to cover the candy and protect it from the dust. Plenty of tinsel should be display-ed upon the tree. It costs little and can be saved to use again next year. The shops, too, have a pretty imita-tion of snow, made of fine tissue pa-per. The gilt bon-bons, which can be bought in the shops by the dozen, not only make the tree look bright but afford the children a lot of amusement. Sprays of red-berried holly tied here and there on the tree tend to brighten it. Gilt stars do not cost much. They may even be made at home, cardboard being out tree tend to brighten it. Gilt stars do not cost much. They may even be made at home, cardboard being cut out to form the star, and covered with gold or silver paper. Tiny can-dles to light the tree at night cost about five cents a dozen. Little metallic candlesticks to attach to the tree cost very little, and are a protection from fire. The box that holds the tree may be covered with thick moss, bits of broken mirror being interspersed to be covered with thick moss, bits of broken mirror being interspersed to represent water. A box of the sol-diers, a Noah's ark or a wooden vil-lage, a gift for one of the children, might find its first use in populat-ing the miniature landscape at the foot of the tree. In the shore, casthe

He had wanted a knife. He had wanted one since he could remem-ber, but now that he had been going to school it seemed to him that there was nothing in the world he wanted like that. The other boys had them. To be sure, they were all older than him, but he had caught up with them in his lessons, and it seemed as if knives and les-sons ought to go together. His parents were afraid he would cut his fingers, but he had used the his fingers, but he had used the other boys' knives and had not cut himself; at least only a little once. and that was an accident.

He made up his mind at last that Santa Claus lay his only hope. te Claus, who knew everything, Sante would know that he was old enough to have a knife-perhaps even oue with two blades, a big one and a One. He mentioned this to his its, but they looked grave and that Santa Claus was very parents, said that Santa Claus was very particular about his little boys fin-gers. Still he had faith, and day and might his faith grew until once it went as far as three blades, a big one and two little ones, such as no boy in school had. But this frightened him even to think of, and he went back right away to two blades. He even said to himself that one blade, a big one with a flat bone handle-a Barlow, as the boys called it-would do. He felt flat bone handle-a Barlow, as the boys called it-would do. He felt sure of getting that, any way, and he put his hand in his pocket to see how it would seem there, and im-agined how the boys at school would gather around to book at it and cut it against their own to see which had the best steel. He had heen getting all the long

He had been getting all the long ends of the wish bones, and his wish was always for the knife. Above the sitting room door there was a perfect thicket of long ends. The knife was certain. He could hardly wait for the time. But one day, when Christmas was no. more than a few weeks off, his father returned from the village with f the ture paper. It had a great deal not ture paper. It had a great deal not two whole pages. The little boy saw them and spread the paper down on and there were a good many things happened at school that he did not care to speak of at home. He wondered how good one had to be to get a knife-a knife with two blades. There knife—a knife with two blades. There were still two weeks until Christmas. He would try to make up by being perfect during those two weeks. He would remember about that long spy glass every minute of the day. By and by he took the paper over ito where this mother was seeing by and by he took the paper over ito where his mother was sewing. There was one picture he did not understand. It was Santa Claus looking at a big book with writing in

"Why," she said, "that is where he sceps the names of children. He puts after them whether they are good or kceps

"Oh !" he asked, "is my name there?" "Why, no; they go by the alphabet; our name would be just on the next your page

The little boy's hands trembled with eagerness. He must see what was on the other side of that page. He took the paper and went back to his place the place just under the picture, but it showed only printing. Then he turned it back again and tried to push a pla under the edge of the leaf. He could not do that either. Then he turned to the other side of the picture once more and held it up to the light. He could see the book and Santa Claus and some writing on the page. He ran once more to his mother. 'Read it, ma," he said. "Read the other side

But she laughed and said it was all the same. Then she tried to explain. He could understand, but he was not satisfied. If he could only see the satisfied. If he could only see the other side of that page he would know then about the knife.

It was very dark when he woke on other. Each paper that came off left the parcel harder and harder, and harder, and there was something now about the shape of it that made him fairly wild with eagerness. He was so excited he could hardly unwind the last paper, that seemed to have no end He tore off great pieces of it and once the package slipped out of his fingers. At last the wrapping was off, and clutched tightly in his hand was a treasure cold and hard, but which warmed the little boy to very soul. 'Ma!" he cried, "Oh, Ma! Oh, Pa his 'Ma

Santa Claus did bring me a knife! He did, Ma, I told you he would !" There was a sound something like laughter from the big bed. Then a

"I guess Santa Claus must have forgotten how old you are. I suppose we'll have to lay it away for a year or two." or two.

But the little boy knew it would not be laid away. He was snuggled down now with the precious cold trea-sure clutched tightly in fingers that "Oh, Ma, it's got two blades !"

"Yes, sir, it has! A big one and fittle one, both at the same end !" "Well ! Well !"

The small fingers roamed over the The small fingers roamed over the smooth, wooden handle which he could not yet see. The sturdy thumb nail hent itself time and again in the little catches of the two cold blades that were too new for him to open. Now and then he reached out to the him mittens and the cookies of his mittens and the cookies and to find another piece of the mixed candy. He sucked the candy to make it last.

Dear heart, how happy he was.

Peloubet. PRACTICAL SURVEY.

National darkness. Behold the ped-ple of God devoted to the worship of idols! Recall the many times that God had shown mercy unto this dis-obedient people. Think what wealth was given them in the products of their land. See how minutely God had given them His laws. Remember how He subdued nations under them, and National darkness. Behold the peofoot of the tree. In sorts of tles and toy fountains, all sorts of devices to add interest to the moss devices to add interest to the mos-covered foot of the tree, may be purchased. Iron holders for the Christmas tree may also be had in the shops. A box weighted with the shops. A box weighted with bricks, however, will do just as well, a hole the size of the trunk of the tree being burned through the thick lid of the box with a red-hot poker.

Christmas in Bethlehen

It is interesting to know-11 is seems fitting that it should be sothat in one osbcure corner of this great world Christmas is a day of great world Christmas is a day of purely religious ceremony and wor-ship, with none of the social merri-ment-which is but the outcome of the Christian heart and home-so the Christian heart and home-me dear to us. This spot is Bethlehem, the birth-place of the Saviour. There, in the Church of the Nativity, which is supposed to contain the grave or grotto in which Jesus is born, upon each returning Christmas Eve a vast concourse of bishops, priests, and people assemble and hold religi-ous services all night long in remem-brance of, and thankluness for, Christ, the great gift which God in His love and compassion for a be-nighted race bestowed upon it, and without whose presence in our without whose presence in our hearts the Christmus which we love so well, the day when all is cheer, the day when self is cast aside and we feel and know that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," would not be possible.

Christmas Greeting.

Sing a song of Christmas! Pockets full of gold; Plums and cakes for stockings. More than they can hold. Pudding in the great pot, Turkey on the spit, Merry faces round the fire-Sorrow? Not a bit!

His Time Coming.

Mrs. Smith-John, you must keep that boy down. Smith-What's the matter with him? Mrs. Smith-He's getting far too dictatorial. He wants to rule everything. Smith-Oh, well, let him enjoy himself while he may. He'll marry some time, and that'll end it.

The Night of Love. O little town of Bethlehem ! How still we see the lie; Above thy deep and dreamless sleep The allent stars go by; Yet in thy dark street shineth The everlasting light; The hopes and fears of all the years Are met in thee to-night. —Bishop Phillips Brooks.