"Panels" says a well known decorator, "are always effective if made even from plain papers, but the most attractive methods are worked out by combining a plain background with Winnipeg Aug 22.—The last few days have been peryons ones for the west, as the weather has been dangerously cool. A Good idea.

A woman who goes abroad almost every summer says that there's just one way to get ready for her trip successfully—that is, with a pencil and paper. She calms to have tried packpaper. She cidims to have tried packing without a list, and it has always resulted in confusion. A long time, a month if possible, before her sailing date she makes out a list of the things she will need to take with her. Then with this list at hand she sets about getting the things ready. When the final packing time comes, she checks off the hings in order to see that nothing is missing.

She says that if one tries to get ready for a long trip without method something is sure to be left behind that will be needed. It's about as had to have too many things along as too few, but the making of the list will be a safeguard against this danger as well as the danger of omitting necessary articles.

after seeing a single detached bone, could reason out the whole structure of the animal of which that bone had been a part. What Agassiz was to animal life all Londoners are to vehicles. They see a fearsome mountain of mud approaching. The foreigner thinks it an evidence of a landkide, but even the small Londoner knows it to be a bus, and the expert adult can tell by the texture of the mud what route it has passed over.

If that brilliant but misguided map maker Napoleon Bonaparte had had a loyal fleet of London 'buses when he tried to cross the English Channel Admiral Nelson's name would have appeared only in the appendix to naval history. It so happened, however, that Nelson had in his service several boatloads of men well qualified to drive 'buses, and their resolute methods of driving through obstacles won Trafalgar and made famous the saying, "England expects every man to do his duty."

Although, the all conquering spirit of the London 'bus has imbued British armies for hundreds of years the symbol itself has not been used in warfare. However, the War Office and the Admiralty may yet advocate the use of squadrons and batteries of 'buses to dislodge future enemies from exceptionally strong positions. Water-loos and Balaklavas could be woneasily with buses to do the charging. What would a few thousands of mere men avail before vehicles that had hidden bold defiance to London streets?

Port Arthur would hoist the white fleg when it heard the 'buses coming Gibraltar, if in other hands than English, would take to its heels.—New York Herald.
