by the train between Ennett's and Ebert's station, about 11 o'clock Saturday night and was instantly killed. It is believed Mr. Haverty had sat down on the edge of the track to light his pipe, as his jack knife and pipe were found together a short distance from where the body lay. Being somewhat dazed from an afternoon's carousal in Chatham, he probably failed to notice the approaching train and was instantly hurled into eternity. The body was discovered on Sunday night and brought to Dresden, where an inquest is being held by Coroner J. J. Wiley.
