Fire Production

has been practiced by all human races for centuries and is the most important of all the arts of life.

It is the only method of producing heat and light which is not accompanied by the use of any explosive material.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

Contributed by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Hampstead, N. B.

Rise up ye Women that are at Ease

AN AWFUL CURSE, VOTE IT DOWN.

The liquor traffic is the enemy of God, the foe of the home and the curse of the country. It is impossible to exaggerate its enormity. The statistics of the quantity consumed and the money expended upon it are simply stupendous in the results they show. If the hunger and the freezing, the groans of women, the cries of men and unborn children could be gathered together in one place, the earth would open and swallow up the frightful enormity.

"Other problems come and go, but this one is ever present. The social evil finds its most powerful ally in the liquor traffic.

The gambling dens of the city are almost always located in saloons, and the evidence of it is obtainable with astonishing ease. All kinds of political corruption can be followed to their root and place of nurture in the saloon.

"The man who can laugh at the liquor traffic laughs with the silly laugh of a fool, or the sneering laugh of the devil. The man who can treat it lightly has a heart of stone or a mind incapable of serious thought."

WORKINGMEN AND DRINK.

Extracts from circular of T. V. Powderly to the Knights of Labor.

"To our drinking members I extend the hand of kindness. I hate the uses to which rum has been put, but it is my duty to reach down and lift up the man who has fallen a victim to the use of liquor. If there is such a man within sound of the secretary's voice when this paper is read, I ask him to stand erect on the floor of his assembly, raise his hand to heaven and repeat with me these words: 'I am a Knight of Labor. I believe that every man should be free from the curse of slavery, whether the slavery appears in the shape of monopoly, usury, or intemperance. The firmest link in the chain of oppression is the one I forge when I drink rummed and reason in drink. No man can rob me of the brain my God has given me unless I am a party to the theft. If I drink to drown grief, I bring grief to my wife, child, and sorrowing friends. I add not one iota to the sum of human happiness when I invite oblivion over the rim of a glass. If one moment's forgetfulness or inattention to duty while drunk brings defeat to the least of labor's plans, a lifetime of attention to duty alone can repair the loss. I promise never again to put myself in such a position."

"If every member of the Knights of Labor would only pass a resolution to boycott strong drink, so far as he is concerned, for five years, and would pledge his word to study the labor question from its different stand points, we would then have an invincible host arrayed on the side of justice.

"The temperance question is an important one, and I sometimes think it is the main issue. The large number of applications during the past year to grant dispensation to allow the initiation of rum-sellers was alarming. I have persistently refused them, and will join my successor, if he values the future success of the order, to shut the doors with triple bars against the liquor dealer. His path, and that of the honest industrious workingman, lie in opposite directions. The rum-seller who seeks admission into a labor society does so with the object that he may entice its members into his saloon after the meetings close. No question of interest to labor has ever been satisfactorily settled over a bar in a rum hole. No labor society ever admitted a rum-seller that did not die a drunkard's death. No workingman ever drank a glass of rum who did not rob his family of the price of it, and in so doing committed a double crime, murder and theft. He murders the intellect with which the Maker hath endowed him. He steals from his family the means of sustenance he has earned for them."

"Don't leave the table," said the landlady, and her new barter rose from his scanty breakfast.

"I must, madam. It's hard wood, and my teeth are not what they used to be."

He—When did she begin to fear that he had married her for her money?

She—Well, I believe her suspicions were first aroused when she had to fee the minister.—Brooklyn Life.

Teacher—"You may tell us, Tommy, some of the ways in which the element of fire confers a benefit on the human race."

Tommy, (who knows something of applications of the business method)—"When the amount of the insurance exceeds the value of the stock on hand."

Hay—Did you ever contribute to the press?

Mary (blushingly)—I have turned down the light sometimes.

Jack—Miss Giddy's heart seems to have been modded for a street car.

Tom—Why, how's that?

Jack—There's always room for one more.

She—Do you know that married men, as a rule, live longer than bachelors?

He—Oh, I don't believe that. It only seems longer to them.

GROWTH.

You, build your dam as high as you can. You think I'm small, but I'll tell you all I'll get over it—over jump—

See how the brown mold over me sits. Keep my long hair nicely in ditta. Forget I'm here, deep out of sight. Where it is dark—as dark as night. You can't stop me while water flows. I may be a river yet—who knows?

Keep me in dress and play I'm a girl. Keep my long hair nicely in curl. But I'm a boy, don't that who can. And some bright day I'll be a man. The world will know me—that's what I want. For I've a thinker in my head.

—Sarah E. Winslow in St. Nicholas.

TOOTHBRUSH AIDS HEALTH.

Sound Teeth and Body Only to Be Had by Its Frequent Use.

It is but a little thing, yet on its proper use depends much of the happiness of modern man. Why civilized people are content to put all toothbrushes down to lollipops, but that sugar in itself is not responsible for bad teeth is proved by the splendid "ivories" often possessed by negroes who practically live upon the sugar cane and thrive upon it, too, during the whole of the season when it is in maturity. Dental decay is common enough, however, among negroes in towns, and it seems clear that the carries of the teeth which is so common among most civilized races is due not to any particular article of diet so much as to digestive and nutritive changes imposed upon us by our mode of life and to some extent by the fact that by hook or crook we do somehow manage to live, notwithstanding our bad teeth, whereas in a state of nature the toothless man soon dies.

Recognizing, then, that until the time arrives when some great social reformer either mends or ends our present social conditions our teeth will tend to rot, and that, whatever the predisposing causes, the final act in the production of caries is the lodgment of microbes on and around the teeth, we see that for long to come the toothbrush will be a necessity if the health is to be maintained. It is only by the frequent use of this little instrument that those minute accumulations can be removed which are at the root of so much mischief. A few elementary lessons in bacteriology would, we fancy, greatly startle many people and certainly would show them the futility of trusting to one scrub a day. The fact is that if people, instead of looking at the toothbrush from an aesthetic point of view and scrubbing away with tooth powders (1) to make their front teeth white, would regard it merely as an aid to cleanliness, they would see that the time so use it is after meals and at night, not just in the morning only, when the debris is left from the day before has been fermenting and brewing acid all night through. They would also see how inefficient an instrument the common toothbrush is unless it is used with considerable judgment. One of the secondary advantages of spending a good deal of money on dentistry is that at least one learns the value of one's teeth. By the time we have got them dotted over with gold stoppings and gold crowns we learn to take care of them, even although that may involve the trouble of cleaning them more than once a day and using perhaps more than one brush for the purpose.—Hospital.

Naming the Baby.

She was a young mother, and it was her first. It was the prettiest, the most intelligent—in fact, the nicest—was such an infant. So she thought it should have a name which would distinguish it from all others. After a great deal of thinking she announced her decision.

"Papa," she said to the happy father, "I have thought of a name for the baby. We will call her Imogen."

Papa was a matter of fact man, who knew there was nothing in that baby different from most others, and he didn't wish to see his child saddled with a name that wouldn't fit in with other circumstances.

"Fancy her marrying a man named Snooks," he thought. "Imogen Snooks will sound nice, won't it? But if I say so she'll begin to cry and will insist upon it."

After a little reflection he thought of a plan.

"I think that's a lovely name, my dear," he cried. "It was my first sweetheart's. She will take it as a compliment, and it will always remind me. Yes, that and your dear mother's name, Mary, are the best I know."

"I think, papa," she said after a pause, "we had better call her Mary, after my mother."

And the awful man chuckled to himself.—Strand Magazine.

A Conspicuous Precedent.

"Shiftless as ever, Thomas?" said the wealthy uncle. "Still making a failure of life, as you always have done?"

"I don't know that I'm such a terrible failure," sulkily answered the poor relation.

"Why, you have nobody but yourself to support, and you can't make both ends meet."

"Well, the rainbow has only itself to support, and it doesn't make both ends meet either."—Chicago Tribune.

Antwerp Bells.

From the cathedral tower at Antwerp 80 bells have for over 300 years rung out the grandest music for the benefit of the people living on the green fields which border the Scheldt. Once a year, in the month of February, the authorities select the music, and the organ plays every hour from the old masters of Christian song.

When Cortes invaded Mexico for the second time, he had 80 musketeers and 80 crossbows.

He—You know the old saying, that "man proposes"—

She—The saying is old enough, but the experience is so new to me that I hasten to avail myself of the opportunity.
