A True Friend.

By RUTH CAMERON.

"He that doth a base thing in zeal for a friend burns the golden thread that ties their hearts together."

"Oh, do tell me. You know I'm dying to hear something real interesting."

"No, I can't; it wouldn't be fair to the girl who told me. I promised her I would not breathe a word to anyone."

"But you needn't tell me the names, just tell me the story without any names."

"You would guess it if I did that."

"No, I wouldn't. Besides, I think you might tell me. You remember I told you about our engagement before I told anyone else."

"I know, my dear, and it was lovely of you; but that was your secret, and this isn't mine."

"But I wouldn't tell a soul," persisted the tease.

"For Final Decision Was Not to Tell."

The possessor of the secret shook her head. "I wish I could, but I can't," she said regretfully but firmly.

"You wait. I'll make you tell it yet," threatened the other, half laughing and half piqued.

So ended the conversation to which had been a passive witness. The next time I saw the tease I asked her she had found out the secret.

"No," she said, "she wouldn't tell me."

"Weren't you really glad, after all?" asked.

"Glad? Why?"

"Well, you like to tell her things. Weren't you glad to know she couldn't be persuaded to tell her friend's secrets?"

She cocked her head and looked at me thoughtfully, while she mulled over what was evidently a new aspect of the matter to her.

"That's Different!"

"Yes," she said. "Of course I don't want her to tell the things I tell her, but—"

"That's different," I finished for her. "Exactly," she said, with a rather shamefaced laugh that showed she realized her own injustice.

It is unjust, isn't it? to try to make our friends act in their relation to others as we wouldn't want them to act in relation to ourselves.

And yet I have often heard women beg each other to tell others' secrets, as in this case, and I have also frequently heard one friend urge another to break an engagement in her favor.

It is a mean thing to do. You discomfit your friend by your entreaties if he refuses; you lose, whether you admit it or not, some of your respect for and trust in him if he acquiesces.

You should never ask a friend to treat anyone else as you would not want him to treat you. And when you meet the spirit of "I could not love thee, dear, so well, loved I not honor more," in friendship you should respect and rejoice in it, not try to break it down by your entreaties.

It may mean some small loss in ungrateful curiosity or in some minor disappointment, but it means the infinitely greater gain of the knowledge that you have a true friend.

DEARBORN & CO., Ltd. ST. JOHN, N.B.

END OF KAISERISM IN U. S.
New York Herald:—The American citizen of Teutonic blood, while a hard headed and positive person, is notably kind at heart, possesses high ideals and reveres womanhood. Mr. Riddler, whose whole attitude with reference to Kaiserism has been wrong, is shocked at the killing of Miss Cavell and says so, and he probably more nearly voices the sentiments of the Americans of German descent than do the German Herald and the New York Herald. The stain which has been put on the German military machine will never be wiped out, but Miss Cavell will not have died in vain if her shocking fate causes the scales to drop from the eyes of those who have been duped by the hyphenated shedders of ink in the cause of blood and iron and brings an end to Kaiserism in the United States.
