Intends to Come to Canada With "Uncles" at War's End.

[Special Cable to The Advertiser.] London, June 10 .- Describing his visit to one of the Canadian hospital bases in France, a correspondent narrates the following interesting discovery. Seated at the head of a table was a child of five, dressed from head to foot in the authentic Canadian uniform. While his brother orderlies had abandoned their headgear during the meal, this little oldier had proudly kept on his miniatur forage cap. It was not difficult to see that he was a pet. An officer with me soon enlightened me on the subject "That," said he, "is the base's mascot uld he leave us, nothing but bad luck would arrive.'

Found Near Mons. It appears that a number of Canadian ambulance men who were tailing up our troops at (MM, C. C. S. C.) retreat from Mons found this little French child half-dead from exposure on the road ide. They had taken him and cared for him. The little fellow did not know what had happened to his parents; they had been swept along with thousand of others in front of the Germans, The French police have tried in vain to fine

Will Go With "Uncles." His uncles, for such he calls them, all have mapped his future, and when the Canadians return to their own land, little Mons, as they call him, will accomson, and there is competition to be allowed to do things for him. As I passed out of the dining-hall shouts of "No. I'll bath him tonight," reached my ears.
