The British forces charged on the American forces at the double-quick, and after the Americans firing a volley [they] retreated over the heights to the water's edge and soon after sent up a flag of truce, surrendering unconditionally to General Sheaffe, which flag of surrender was received by General Sheaffe stationed in a battery commanding the river about half way up the mountain road, and the writer, John Clark, though too late to be in the fight, was in the battery at the surrender, and with his detachment assisted conveying the prisoners to Fort George—972 prisoners taken.

The British force stationed on the heights above Queenston at the line consisted of the grenadier and light companies of the 49th Regiment of the line under the command of Major James Dennis and Captain Williams; two militia flank companies from York, Captains Heward and Cameron; two companies of the 5th Lincoln Militia under Captains Samuel Hatt and James Durand, with a few of the Six Nations warriors under Captain Norton and young John Brant.

The enemy commenced crossing from Lewiston before daylight, screening themselves before the heights.

After daylight our batteries, three in number, commenced
