

scholars. Then there is the Presbyterian Christian Endeavor Manual of 79 pages, in brown and silver leatherette, prepared by Dr. J.R. Miller and W. T. Ellis; and is full of valuable suggestions and information for C. E. meetings. Finally comes the Presbyterian Handbook for 1897, containing facts respecting the history, statistics, theological seminaries, missionary and benevolent boards, etc., of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., together with Daily Bible Readings, S. S. Lessons and Prayer Meeting Topics for 1897, all for 5 cents; 10 copies for 25 cents, and 100 for $1.50. On page 37 of its 65 pages appear the statistics of the Alliance of Reformed Churches. This is a very useful little book.

Somewhat or other a volume found its way into the Presbyterian collection which, on examination, turns out to be from our friends of the American Baptist Publication Society, and appropriately so, for its author was a Baptist. This is the Phoenix Edition of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, of 410 clearly printed duodecimo pages, neatly bound. It is a very cheap book for 25 cents. I have a copy of the Pilgrim's Progress, printed in London in 1767. It has most grotesque illustrations, and contains The Third Part, by an anonymous writer, together with an account of the Life and Death of John Bunyan. The Third Part lacks the purity and delicacy of the Immortal Dreamer's work, but is not void of merit.

Two more volumes have been sent to the editor for review. One of these is the Report of America's Relief Expedition to Asia Minor, under the Red Cross, by its President, Miss Clara Barton, and her aids. This small quarto paper-bound book, of 150 pages and many interesting illustrations, will well repay perusal. It contains a great deal of valuable information concerning a field towards which the eyes of the civilized world have long converged. Miss Barton herself is the heroine of the age, a woman of whom the United States and all Christendom may well be proud, although she did blossom out at Constantinople into heroic verses that dig into the ribs of the
