General Comments:

In strict market terms, Ireland enjoys a fair degree of self-sufficiency in most fish species. There seems to be some chances for developing cooperation possibilities between Canadian and Irish fish processors. The technology in Canada is more advanced and the post feels that if a joint venture or other arrangement could be established, the Canadian company would then be in a position to supplement Irish supplies when they run short. The right conditions have not emerged in either Canada or Ireland and the level of interest has not emerged to develop a joint venture.
