

must pay the penalty; and one part of the penalty is that they cannot be loved when they are feared .. or exploited."

On a day like this, however, I would not like to end on a note which suggests that one cannot be loved. Everything about this commencement suggests a happier and more hopeful mood. I know that you who are graduating are the beneficiaries indeed the very centre of that mood today. I hope that it may follow you in the months and years ahead when you will be privileged to put into action the sound principles and the good training that you have received at this University.
