REFUGEES

BILL C-84—NEED FOR FURTHER AMENDMENTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, The Globe and Mail reports that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) may make amendments to Bill C-84, amendments he absolutely refused during weeks of debate in Parliament and committee. If he is beginning to wake up, that's good. However, he'll need to go much further than reported.

His Bill will surely fail at the Supreme Court as long as it makes criminals of Canadians who help a refugee without a visa to come to an immigration office in Canada; allows immigration officers to break and enter, search, and seize documents at will; detains new arrivals on mere Minister's suspicion, without habeas corpus rights, and violates Canada's signature on the UN Convention for Refugees by turning refugee ships away at sea.

The Minister must back down still further.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT AS MODEL FOR WORLD

Mr. Marcel Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, the month of December gives me pause to reflect upon peace and what is happening in foreign countries where Christmas this year will be marred by violence, where people will suffer and cry.

Here is what we Canadians have achieved in 1987 after only three years under a Progressive Conservative Government: social peace throughout the country, joy of living, reconciliation of all Canadians from coast to coast, leadership highlighted by humanism and based on the individual's sense of responsibility and valorization.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are now proud of themselves and their Government because they feel useful and responsible. They have confidence in their Prime Minister, and justifiably so.

Over a number of years the Liberal Party drew inspiration from the NDP in its quest for socialist order in Canada. As a result, Canadians sank $200 billion deeper into debt, they lost their self-confidence, and they now live in a climate of mistrust where aggressivity between individuals and cultural and economic interest groups prevails.

Mr. Speaker, it is my fervent wish that 1988 will enable countries torn by war and misery to establish institutions, policies and governments whose inspirational spirit will resemble that of the administration now headed by the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney.

AEROSPACE

SITE OF FUTURE SPACE AGENCY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Government has earmarked $824 million for the space research program. This is not new money, but funds recycled from the appropriations of the National Research Council which, as we have seen this week, is seeking applicants for jobs with the famous space agency—yet we still have no idea as to where the agency is to be located.

Reading newspapers in recent days made me appreciate just why the Prime Minister simply cannot make up his own mind. On September 16 the Minister of State for Science and Technology stated that this essentially political decision rests with the Prime Minister.

Today's Le Droit reports that the same Minister is saying: "Decision not made yet". As we recall, the Minister of State for Science and Technology stated: "Within a few weeks".

We know that even the Minister of State told us: "No, no, never ever. The decision will not be made by tomorrow"!

Well, when will this Government have the nerve to tell us: The Space Agency—in Ottawa or in Montreal? Or half in Ottawa and half in Montreal? Where will it be located? Somewhere in limbo? Do something, you guys! This means jobs in my riding, in the national capital.

HUMAN RIGHTS

WORLD-WIDE VIOLATIONS—ROLE TO BE PLAYED BY PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. John Ostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, December 10, has been declared International Human Rights Day by the United Nations. Man has made tremendous technological progress to the point where nature can be challenged or controlled. However, a dark cloud hangs over the greatness of civilization.
