

Page 45, line 15.

*Nor have the steeds of Helius
A moment to demur.*

Helius, in Greek mythology, was the god of the sun.

Page 45, line 21.

The Contoocook is a small river in New Hampshire.

Page 66, line 5.

Some say he's born in Scotia.

Dempster says, St. Patrick was born in Scotia Minor, now called Scotland.

Page 66, line 7.

While others say at Nutria.

Herodotus states, that his birthplace was Nutria, a district of England, supposed to have been the abode of giants.

Page 66, line 8.

Or in Rosina glen.

Camden points out the very place of his nativity, near a promontory in a glen called Rosevale or Rosina, importing, a vale of roses.

Page 66, line 9.

Some at Kirkpatrick say he's born.

Usher names the very spot where he was born, at a place called Kilpatrick or Kirkpatrick, between the castle of Dunbarton and the city of Glasgow.

Page 66, line 10.

Or Pendac near the tide.

Pendac, or Pepidiauc, is situated in Pembrokeshire, Wales, and is now denominated Menavia or St. David's Head.