big burlesque carried cally or artistically. STAR.

If you have enjoyed in the past the wonderful shows provided by Henry P. Dixon, and touted it as the best organization of its kind on the circuit, this season's output, known as the Big Revue of 1917, which commences a week's engagement at the Star at today's matinee, is bound to put all previous achievements in the shade. From all accounts it contains more nevelues, more original ideas, more refreshing and tuneful melodies, better fun, more aurpriess than any similar entertainment now currying popular approval before the public. The old favorites, Harry (Hickey) Levan and Clare Devine will head an incomparable cast. Besides, twenty pretty and vivacious chorus maidens help to augment the proceedings with their singling, dancing and soud looks. In addition there will be special songs, bits, travesties and features not found in other shows.

THE FORMAN MYSTERY

By GEORGE HUGHES.

"While standing there I suddenly realized that I was in an awkward predicament. Edith Forman, having met me at the terminal, would guess that I was on my way to visit her sister, and when the tragedy was discovered would naturally connect me with it. So I resolved to get away as quickly as possible. Dropping the revolver on the floor beside my dead wife, I left the house. My one obsession was to place as great a distance as possible between Leadale and myself. So I hurried toward Leadale railway station. Arrived at the end of the bridge, I saw a motor car standing there. Being able to drive, I decided to utilize it and make my journey to the station so much shorter. But I found I could not start it. The engine was cold. So I left it and hurried afoot to the station.

"When I arrived there I found that I had lost the return half of my railway ticket. I had put it in my waist-coat pocket earlier in the evening, so judged it had fallen out during the tussle with Marden, or while I was trying to start the automobile.

"As to the truth of my story, your honor," turning toward the judge in appeal, "here is my marriage certificate." He handed a long envelope over to Mr. Bright, who in turn gave it to the judge. The latter opened the paper contained in the envelope, adjusted his glasses more firmly upon the high bridge of his nose, and read. Having perused it, he handed it back to Mr. Bright, nodding his satisfaction meanwhile.

"Should you want corroboration of my story, sir, my mother and the station agent at Leadale could be asked to testify."

A ripple of approval broke from the audience as he sat down in the chair laid bare the grisly skeleton of the past, appealed to and aroused its swift sympathy.

The voice of Mr. Bright checked any further demonstration

"May it please your honor," he said. "to give permission for Miss Forman to be re-examined?" And, the judge assenting, Edith Forman was recalled.

"Will you kindly tell the court why you removed the revolver from beside your sister's body, Miss Forman?" Mr. Bright queried. She was encouraged by his kindly tone.

"Because I was afraid that my sister's husband was implicated in her death," she said. "I had met him earlier in the evening, and judged he had been up to the house. By hiding the weapon I had hoped to steer suspicion from him."

"But did it never occur to you that your sister might have ended her own life?"

"Never. I thought Mr. Walton had

The sound of the telephone bell brought him abruptly from his gloom. But there was no haste in his st-pe as he approached it; he deemed it purely a professional call. But no sooner was his ear to the receiver than the gloom/surrounding him lifted. Into his dull eyes flashed the bright light of renewed hope as he answered the call with "Right away!" and leaped buoyantly from the instrument. He threw the receiver into place with a fine disregard for injury and consequent repair expenses.

This is essential in order not to interfere with the artillery and photographic machine work closer in The correspondent proceeds to show that the whole doctrine on while the British air sgree works it can be contrary being the case. It is according attacks. He dismisses as milescading any possible impression of German air predominance, quite the contrary being the case. It is accombedged that the enemy air service, since the battle of the Somme, has been reorganized and much improved in efficiency and boldness, but our airmen are confident of their fability to demoralize the Boch filers. The correspondent reminds the public that the the number of losses is apparently increasing, the growth of the service is probably in considerably greater ratio. He points out that it is most seldom that a German aeroplane is brought down on our ground. The explanation is obvious.

"Co-operation with the artillery continued in the daytims unhindered, except by the weather, altho repeated attempts were made by the enemy to prevent this important work.

Seventeen Raids.

"Seventeen successful bomb raids were carried out on the enemy's aerodromes and munition depots and railways a long distance behind the lines, in addition to numerous small raids. A total of over eight tons of bombs were dropped.

"All the time intense fighting between large formations took place. Our casualties are twenty-eight machines missing, a large number of which are known to have been shot down in combat over the enemy's country.

"It is known that the enemy suffered very heavy casualties. In one case an obseiver was seen to fall out of his machine, which went down out of control in a spin. In another case the fighting was so close that an enemy pilot was seen to fall from his machine, which was out of control and diving by the nose. Fifteen hostile machines were driven down and actually seen to crash to the ground, while thirty-one others were driven down damaged, a large proportion of which must have been totally destroyed. In addition, ten hostile balloons were brought down in flames."
