SOCIAL SERVICE TALK. In the school room of St. Mary's church last evening A. M. Belding gave a talk on social service. William Ingram presided, and Rev. Mr. McKim introduced the speaker. Mr. Belding began with a series of illustrations of conditions of child-life, and of some of the housing conditions in St. John and their housing conditions in St. John and their churches more of the pecule who are now of the pecule are now of the pecule who are now of the pecule housing conditions in St. John and their effect upon the health and morals of the inmates; and especially upon the health and training of the children. He then pointed out the difficulties in the way of improving conditions, since these involved not only better housing but education of some of the tenants to induce them to make the most and the best of the induced at the close of the address.

Some men are born absent-minded. Some achieve absentmindedness, others have absent-mindedness thrust upon them.

And then, again, men's morals are rather lax in the matter of

duction at the Lyric Monday or yesterday. Miss Minter is seen as a wronged heiress and enters the home of the nan who robbed her as an employe. It does not take her long to win the esterm, respect and admiration of the members of the household and in fact the son falls madly in love with her.

Through her efforts he is redeemed from drink but this almost creates the impression that little Mary is leading somewhat of a double life. However, the son comes to the fore with a confession and the story ends as all stories should end—they lived happily ever after. There are some particularly amusing scenes throughout the production, particularly that of the rooster in the ball room and content with the life of the railway man.
