Slaves of the Present Day!

Under the above striking caption, a forcible article on the condition of the colored people in last week's "Journal of Commerce."

According to the author, "the man who works for a salary or wages and saves nothing is virtually a slave while that condition lasts. He is absolutely dependent upon his weekly wage for subsistence. His escape from servitude lies only in saving a part of each week's or each month's income. In proportion as his savings accumulate freedom is won. Every slave looks forward to the day when money saved will make him free."

Our explanatory booklet is free for the asking. Why not write for a copy to-day—now for instance.

OCCASIONAL'S LETTER

Halifax's financial record in the middle of the last century.

"Early reminiscences of Halifax," a gay town in 1825—Remarkable for the hospitality of its people and the beauty of its girls—What constituted the garrison at that date. How the ladies and gentlemen dressed.

The good old days of Wilder Green. How the fashions have changed.

There was a time when Halifax could boast of a financial record that no other city of its size in Canada could play a decent second to. From causes which are self-evident the record is not now so good, and there is a lack of solidly abundant, and although the poor we had always with us, there was no city on the continent where there existed less destitution, and where the hand of charity had less call for its bounty.

I have run over in my mind some of the rich men of that day. At the particular period I refer to, all those that I shall mention except possibly one or two, were engaged in mercantile life in this city—and many of them spent their money like gentlemen of the old school. I will mention only a few of these millionaires:

I have given 70 names here—showing a capital of twenty-four millions four hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The population in 1881 was upwards of 30,000; now it is upwards of 50,000.

In my list, it will be borne in mind, are the names of several who afterwards doubled or tripled their money value—the figures given are as they were in the early '80s. I think the whole list will constitute an eye-opener to many who either didn't know or had forgotten what constituted Halifax's acknowledged wealth 30 or 40 years ago.

"Early reminiscences of Halifax" was the title of a paper read before the Nova Scotia Historical Society, in 1887, by the late Peter Lynch, a member of that society, and a resident of Halifax. The paper was a very gay town, and remarkable for the hospitality of its people. The beauty of its girls, the latter a reputation it has never lost. We had then a lieutenant-governor, appointed directly from home, and up to the time of Lord Falkland the collection of military men, he being also the general in command of the troops. Our admiral and a commissioner of the dockyard, the headquarters of the large garrison, and a number of naval officers at the head of the naval department, all paid by the imperial government at imperial rates, which they spent with profuse liberality. We had also at that time a great number of wealthy merchants, for the war, then recently concluded, had thrown a large amount of wealth into our laps, and made people believe that the property was to continue forever. They lived to realize their mistakes, but still their great wealth, thus rapidly and easily accumulated, remained to them and their descendants for several decades after that.

"The garrison consisted of three full regiments of foot, three batteries of artillery, and a large corps of engineers, or sappers and miners, as they were then called. The garrison having a large staff. In the army a large portion of the officers were of the highest wealth, for here with the purchase of the property was a great inducement for rich men to enter the service. In the civil branch there were the customs department, with its almost numberless officers; the collection of a salary of $2,000 sterling a year; the subordinate officers, and the subordinate officers, and with proportionate incomes, all living in the town, and giving a tone of great gaiety and profusion to the community.

"But besides those sources of gaiety and amusement there were also a few numerous bodies of various descriptions, all of which were centres of the mellow horn and the continued shouting of the crowds which lined the streets on either side. Immediately opposite the east side of the Provincial Building was a very large house, then occupied by Miller, the famous host who then kept the best hotel in the town. There the party all brought up in several ranks, and although wedged in as close as possible, they were able to see the Prince and the Duke of Devonshire.

"At once the whole scene was thrown open, and the servants of the house, together with those of the several messes and others, streamed forth in their gay liveries, bearing trays laden with cakes, confections, and steaming hot negus, then the favorite beverage, and having distributed the welcome contents amongst the whole party the merry high again broke upon the clear frosty air, and the whole party in order swept along the streets on their way to Pultney's 12 Mile House, where about 3 o'clock then the fashionable hour for dinner, the party sat down to a good dinner as had been anywhere in the province or perhaps out of it. Again at about 9 o'clock, the stillness of the night was invaded by the many notes of the bugle, as the party, not exactly in the same order, but with the same regularity, again swept along the streets on their way home. It was observed that the weather was supplied with horses as the stagers, and it is just possible that that malady amongst the horses may have been the parent of many of the mishaps of the drivers.

"And now a few words as to fashions, habits, furniture, and as I have said, the winters were more severe and protracted than they are now, but people dressed less comfortably. The coats were of dark cloth, and the breeches of dark cloth, and the trousers of dark cloth, and the shoes of dark cloth, and the hats of dark cloth, and the gloves of dark cloth, and the stockings of dark cloth, and the socks of dark cloth, and the undershirts of dark cloth, and the drawers of dark cloth, and the nightgowns of dark cloth, and the pajamas of dark cloth, and the slippers of dark
