It was as London manager of the Bank of Montreal, however, that he is best known to the rapidly-growing circle of Canadian financiers. Just what services he rendered to Canadians, influential and otherwise, traveling in England in the capacity of financial adviser and friend will never be known; but they were very great. Votes For Indians.

The question of making it easier for the Indians to obtain full Canadian citizenship by the removal of the present onerous conditions which must be complied with before an Indian can be enfranchised, is one that will be taken up by the Department of Indian Affairs with a view to having the necessary legislation passed. Less than a thousand Indians have ever been enfranchised in Canada since the Government first took them under its care, but at the present time there are fully a thousand occupying positions of all sorts in Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, Brantford and other cities and towns in Ontario and Quebec. In the east particularly many of the Indians have been leaving the reserves and living the life of their white neighbors. It is felt to be a real hardship that it should be se difficult for their a become afternations.

Owing to the difficulties in the way very few are now becoming enfranchised, but a famous exception some years ago was the enfranchisement of the whole band of the Wyandottes, whose reserve was near Sarnia, and who belonged the Luron Nation. They were a very progressive class of Indians and many of them have since done well in town and city. One is manager of a shoe factory in Detroit, at a salary of $6,000 a year.

School For Immigrants.

An agricultural farm school for immigrants who intend to settle in Canada is being conducted in England. The young men are being trained so far as possible according to Canadian methods, Canadian implements being used and Canadian hours and methods of working being adhered to. The training given qualifies the immigrant to demand and receive more pay when he reaches this side the Atlantic and is beneficial alike to him and to his Canadian employer, as few employers have time to train young men entering their employ.

In the Englehart district of Northern Ontario this fall thousands of spruce and balsam trees were cut for dwellers in the cities of the south. On one day Mr. John Gemmill shipped three carloads of evergreens to Philadelphia. This is the first shipments of the kind from F glehart.

We can judge all deeds by motives, See the good and had within, Often we should love the sinner, All the while we loathe the sin. Could we know the powers working To overthraw integrity, We should judge each other's errors With more patient charity.

If we knew the care and trials

Knew the effort all in vain,
And the bitter disappointment,
Understood the loss and gain;
Would the grim external roughner
Seem, I wonder, just the same?
Would we help where now we hind
Would we pity where we blame?

Ab we judge each other harshly. Knowing not life's hidden force Knowing not the fount of action Is less turbid at its source; Seeing not amid the evil All the golden grains of good, Oh, we'd love each other better If we only understood.

Just a word about the high cost of living.

All the politicians and the newspapers are talking about the high cost of living. Housekeepers are not only talking about it, but are feeling it. Now, as far as meats go, we can be of service to you. There has grown a very decided demand for certain cuts—result, prices have to go up, for the demand exceeds the supply. This means that many another cut, for all purposes just about as good, is not in such demand; those who buy these cuts are getting splendid value. Drop in and see us next time you are down town and let us talk over the meat question. We can help you.

PROLOGUE. This is a story of a brave girl went to prison for three years for a crime that she did not commit nd when she left prisonher record stood between her and a living earned honestly. She gained more than a living, and she got it legally. She met bad men and good men, and she pitted her wits against those of men trained in the intricacies of the law and in the plans of criminals.

Mary Turner is good or bad ccording to the way you look at her. The police and the representatives of law and order that had condemned her to a felon's cell called her bad. One young man believed her to be good, and he stood by her through storm and stress, through circumstance that tried his soul.

This story gives an accurate if work of the police and the crimi nals, and it shows the finish of brave crook who followed unde viatingly the course he had map-

CHAPTER I.

The Panel of Light. The lids of the girl's eyes lifted slowly, and she stared at the panel of light in the wall. Just at the outset the act of seeing ade not the least impression on her numbed brain. For a long time she inclined to regard the dim filumination in the wall with the same passive. ion in the wall with the same passive fixity of gaze. Apathy still lay upon she realized her own inertness and rested in it gratefully, subtly fearful lest her plight. In a curious subconscious fashlon she was striving to hold on to this deadness of sensation, thus to win a little respite from the torture that had exhausted her soul.

Of a sudden her eyes noted the black lines that lay across the panel of light, and in that instant her spirit was quickened once again. The clouds liftquickened once again. The clouds lift-ed from her brain. Vision was clear how. Understanding seized the full import of this hideous thing on which she looked. For the panel of light was a window set high within a wall of stone. The rigid lines of black that crossed it were bars-prison bars. It

Crouching miserably on the narrow bed, she maintained her fixed watching of the window—that window which was a symbol of her utter despair. Again agony wrenched within her. Again agony wrenchef within her.

The girl was appalled by the merclessuess of a destiny that had so outraged right. She was wholly innocent of having done any wrong. She had struggled through years of privation to keep herself clean and wholesome, worthy of those gentificials from whom she drew her blood. And carnest effort had ended at hist under an overwhelming accusation, false, yet more the less faint to her. This accusation after soul weatying delmys had childhoaled today for conviction. The sentence of the in conviction. The somence of the court had been imposed upon her—that-for three years she should be impris-

f Mary Turner before the catastrophe came to distinguish if from many another. Its most significant details were of a sordid kind, familiar to poverty. Her father had been an unsuccessful man as success is esteemed by this generation of Manmon worshipers. He was a gentleman, but the trivial fact is of small avail today. He was of good bitth, and he was the possessor of an inherited competence. He had as well intelligence, but it was not of a financial sort.

So, little by little, his fortune became shrunken toward nothingness by reason of injudicious investments. He married a charming woman, who, after a brief period of wedded happiness, gave her life to the birth of the single child of the union, Mary. As the years passed the daughter grew toward maturity in an experience of ever increasing penury. The girl was in the high school when her father inally gave over his rather feeble ef-fort of living. At his death the father a humble employment in the Emportum, the great department store owned by Edward Gilder. To be sure, the wage was infinitesmal, while the toll was body breaking, soul breaking. Mary nevertheless avoided the worst perils of her lot. She did not flinch under privation, but went her way through it, if not serenely, at least those temptations that beset a girl who is at once poor and charming.

Those who fail to essertence.

Among her fellows were some like herself, others unlike. Of her own sort in this single particular were the two girls with whom she shared a cheap room. Their common decency in attitude toward the other sex was the unique bond of union. In their association she found no real compan onship. Nevertheless they were whole-some enough. Otherwise they were Uliterate, altogether uncongenial.

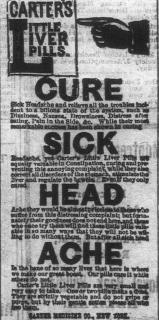

In such wise, through five dreary rears, Mary Turner lived. Nine hours laily she stood behind a counter. She scant meals over the gas, washing and ironing, for the sake of that neat appearance which was required of her by those in authority at the Emporium, yet more especially necessary for her own self respect.

With a mind keen and earnest she ontrived some solace from reading and studying since the free library gave her this opportunity. By candid comparison of herself with others about her she realized the fact that she possessed an intelligence beyond the average. The training by her fa-ther, too, had been of a superior kind. There was as well, at the back vague iy, the feeling of particular self re-spect that belongs inevitably to the possessor of good blood. Finally she demurely enjoyed a modest appreciaion of her own physical advantages.

In short, she had beauty, brains and breeding, three things of chief impor-tance to any woman.

There had been thefts in the store. They had been traced eventually to a certain department, that in which certain department, that in which Mary worked. The detective was alert. Some valuable silks were missed. Search followed immediately. The goods were, found in Mary's locker. That was enough. She was charged with the theft. She protested innocence, only to be laughed at in derision by her accusers. Every thief declares innocence. Mr. Glider himself was emphatic against her. The thiering had been long continued. An exiample must be made. The girl was ar the Tombs awaiting trial. She was quite friendless. To the world she was only a thief in duress. At the last the trial was very short. Her lawyer was merely an unfedged precitioner as. merely an unfiedged practitioner as-signed to ber defense as a formality of the court. At the end twelve good men and true rendered a verdict of guilty against the shuddering girl in guilty against the shuddering girl in the prisoner's dock.

That which was the supreme tragedy to the broken girl in the cell merely afforded rather agreeable entertainment to her former fellows of the department store. Mary Turner throughout her term of service there had been without real indimates, so that now mone was ready to mourn over her fate. Even the two roommates had felt some shight offense, since they sensed the superiority of her, though vaguely. Now, they found a sung satisfaction in the fact of her disaster as emphasizing very pleasurably their own continuance in respectability.

On the day of Mary Turner's trial there was a subtle gayety of gossiplings On the day of Mary Turner's trial there was a subtle gayety of gosslpings to and fro through the stone. The glel's plight was like a shuttlecock driven hither and you by the battle dores of many tongues. It was the first time in many years that one of the amployees had been thus accused of theft. Shoplifters were so common as to be a stale toule. There was a reas to be a stale topic. There was a re-freshing novelty in this case, where one of themselves was the calprit. Her fellow workers chatted desultorily of her as they had opportunity, and complacently thanked their gods that they were not as she-with reason. Smithson, a member of the executive staff, did not hesitate to speak his mind, though none too forcibly. Yet his comment, meager as it was, stood wholly in Mary's favor. And he spoke with a certain authority, since he had given official attention to the giri. given official attention to the girl.
